Everyone lives better in a Zone-Controlled house

Living Area, (Zone 1)

separate thermostat control—cool for leisure.

When friends drop in on a summer evening, the ability to increase the cooling in the living area without affecting the rest of the house is important for real comfort. Zone Control, with two or more thermostats, allows you to put your cooling where you want it, when you want it.

Bedroom Area, (Zone 2)

separate thermostat control—cool for sleeping.

Only Zone Control enables you to adjust temperatures according to the way you use your rooms. A thermostat in the sleeping area allows you to provide your children with just the amount of cooling they need for healthful rest in hot weather.

Zone Control means dividing your house into two or more areas, each controlled by a separate thermostat. This gives you the temperatures you want, when and where you want them—summer and winter.

It's living as

LIKE TO LIVE GRACIOUSLY? You'll love the splendor of a broad-windowed room like this, protected from heat and glare by the overhanging roof. It's the livable kind of living room many builders are putting into homes these days. Room for entertainment with plenty of floor space, built-in snack bar . . . a room that's comfortably lighted with indirect ceiling lights and well-staged "spots." And there's room for contentment, too, in the master's den just a few steps away.

you like it...

IN A NEW HOME OF YOUR OWN!

LIKE TO LIVE CONVENIENTLY? Then imagine yourself in this kitchen, with everything you need at your fingertips—built-in range with griddle, oven and broiler, extra-wide sink, sunny breakfast nook. And look at the cabinet space; the handy overhead rack for storage and display of cooking utensils. Nothing "kitcheny" about this delightful kitchen except its design for convenient living.

FURNITURE BY YORK COUNTY CHAIR COMPANY, RED LION, PA.

LIKE TO LIVE BEAUTIFULLY? Make sure your new home has Lennox All-Season Air Conditioning! In that clean, filtered, humidity-controlled air, complexion and hair thrive: no cold-weather drying out, no hot-weather "melting out." Entertaining is a joy. A joy for decorating—be gay as you like: light colors stay bright in Lennox-filtered air!

LIKE TO DO YOUR LIVING NOW? Then see your local builders—now! They've wonderful new home to show you—so attractive, so modern, so livable, so easy to pay for. Do it this very weekend, and you'll be on your way to—living as you like it!

7 SATISFACTIONS OF OWNING A NEW HOME

1. THE PRIDE OF LIVING in a home as up-to-date as your new car.
2. BETTER LIVING, in a home designed for today's tastes.
3. GREATER VALUE, through modern materials and building methods.
4. MORE COMFORT, with the latest, most efficient materials and equipment.
5. LESS UPKEEP, with everything in your house brand-new.
6. LESS HOUSEWORK, thanks to improved house design and many built-in conveniences.
7. SECURITY FOR YOUR FUTURE, with your money invested in a readily marketable property—a modern home.

Turns "LAWNING" TIME INTO LOUNGING TIME:

GOODYEAR

UNDERGROUND LAWN SPRINKLING SYSTEM

A moment's thought and you'll realize over half your weekly lawn-care time is consumed by watering. This is a tiresome chore which can easily and economically be converted into hours of leisure by installing an all-rubber Underground Lawn Sprinkling System by Goodyear.

But there's more than lounging time to be gained with a Goodyear system. Not only does your lawn get the controlled, raindrop watering it needs for healthy deep-root growth, but you save on water bills.

Moreover, being all-rubber sets the Goodyear system apart from all others. The flexible rubber pipe and fittings easily fit any lawn, can be installed without tearing up the turf. And they won't rust or rot—won't clog with scale—won't split on freezing—last indefinitely. Best of all, it's surprisingly low in cost.

In a nutshell: You can save time—save money—save your lawn—with a twist of your wrist, with an all-rubber Underground Lawn Sprinkling System by Goodyear. Details are available at garden supply outlets everywhere. Or fill out the coupon.

BOTH FREE! WITH A New Membership IN THE HERITAGE CLUB: THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER AND THE ILIAD OF HOMER

When the membership rolls close again —as they must in a few short weeks!—
you will be glad you seized this opportunity to obtain a unique collection of the world's classics, especially illustrated by the greatest artists and well printed on special papers—for the same price as rental library novels!

▶ THE STORY of the travels of Ulysses is of course divided into two parts, The Iliad forming the first part, The Odyssey the second. Together, they have often been called "the first great novel." Pope's translation is one of the great poems of his age. The classical drawings which John Flaxman made in illustration are among the great drawings of the world. Now, in these two volumes, they have been gathered together for the first time!

These two big, almost enormous, quarto volumes were, when first distributed, among the greatest successes of The Heritage Club. They have been out-of-print for nearly a dozen years. Because of the great demand from the members, the directors of the Club have now re-issued both volumes. AND—they have decided to present both volumes to each person who applies for a new membership as a result of reading this advertisement!

NOW YOU MAY KNOW—indeed, you should know—that the membership rolls of The Heritage Club are not always open for new members. When it does happen, you are offered an unusual opportunity which you should seize.

For now The Heritage Club is preparing the announcement of the Twenty-first Series of its fine books. For this Twenty-first Series, the membership rolls are opened to new members for a brief time—for a brief time only!—and, if you seize the opportunity to get a new membership for yourself at this time, you can obtain copies of The Odyssey and The Iliad as a GIFT.

THE HERITAGE CLUB distributes to its members "the classics which are our heritage from the past, in editions which will be the heritage of the future." These books are not falsely de luxe, nor are they old editions dressed up for a new market. In all the crush of "book clubs" there is none at all like The Heritage Club. For the Heritage books are especially designed by the most famous typographers in the world, they are illustrated by the greatest of the world's artists, they are carefully printed by leading printers on papers which have been chemically tested to assure a life of at least two centuries, and they are handsomely bound and boxed.

So you may find this next statement hard to believe; but nevertheless it is true, and it seems a principal reason for the continuing success of this Club's co-operative plan: the members obtain these books for the same price that they are called upon to pay for ordinary rental library novels! Each member pays only $3.95 for each book—or even as low as $3.55 each if he pays for the books in advance!

NOW a handsome Prospectus is being prepared for this Twenty-first Series. In this Prospectus are described the twelve books now being made especially for the members of the Club.

If you apply in time, you will be able to obtain books like these:

Carlyle's The French Revolution illustrated with paintings made in Paris by Bernard Lamotte; and Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea illustrated with colored gravures by Edward A. Wilson; and Dostoevsky's The Idiot illustrated by Fritz Eichenberg; and The Last Days of Pompeii illustrated with engravings made in the ruins of Pompeii by Kurt Craemer; and Dickens' Dombey and Son illustrated by Henry C. Pitz; and Peer Gynt; and The Voyage of the Beagle...

These are only a few of the titles!

Yet, if it should happen that you do not desire to have any of these books, you are given a list of fifty Heritage books-in-print—from which to select substitutions!

THERE HAVE BEEN great book bargains before, of course, and there will be again. But it seems safe to say that never in the history of book publishing has a greater bargain than this been offered to wise buyers of books.

Indeed, you are now invited to put that statement to the test! If you will fill out the coupon printed below and mail it to The Heritage Club, you will be sent a copy of the descriptive Prospectus. Also, one of the remaining new memberships will be reserved for you—and presentation copies of The Odyssey and The Iliad, too!

Reservation Coupon

To THE HERITAGE CLUB,
595 Madison Ave., New York 22

Please send me a copy of your new Prospectus, in which are described the books to be distributed to the members in the Twenty-first Series. I understand that, if I send you my application at this time, I will be entitled to have a copy of THE ILIAD and a copy of THE ODYSSEY without cost; and that you will now reserve a membership for me, awaiting receipt of my application.

HOTPOINT'S EXCLUSIVE NEW SPOT•LESS ACTION OUTMODES ALL OTHER DISHWASHING METHODS!

Skeptical housewives are convinced the new Hotpoint Dishwasher gets everything sparkling clean, as no other dishwashing method can!

Hotpoint's new electric dishwasher gets dishes cleaner, more sparkling, more sanitary than dishes washed any other way. Yet you just push a button. Everything's done for you—even an automatic pre-rinse that does away with hand-rinsing.

Two 5-minute Spot-Less washes—with fresh detergent each time—scrub away every trace of food-soil and film. In water that's hotter than hands can stand, dishes then get two thorough rinses.

Spot-Less second rinse eliminates spots on glass and silver! A few drops of "Rinse-Dry," a super wetting agent, are automatically injected into this rinse. Water spreads so smoothly it can't form drops, can't dry as spots.

Racks roll out separately for easy loading, hold complete service for 8. Many families find they hold a full day's dishes. (Upper rack alone holds 31 glasses.)

Five modern Colortones, Copertone, white, or satin-chrome finish. 24-inch undercounter models, maple-top mobile models, and 48-inch dishwasher-sinks. See the new Hotpoint Dishwashers soon!

Your eyes tell you! Spotted glass (left) was rinsed in plain water. Sparkling glass (right) was rinsed the new Hotpoint Spot-Less way. It gleams like new!

ICE STICK TRAYS freeze icy fingers for your tall summer drinks, and because they have a longer cold surface, they do a better cooling job than the chunky ice cubes. The unbreakable polyethylene tray delivers 14 sticks into your ice bucket with just a twist, and it fits into any ice tray compartment. Two trays are $1 postpaid. Taylor Gifts, Wayne 1, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE VEGETABLE PEOPLE

are the gayest salt and pepper shakers we've found for your summer table. They are ceramic in colors as lively as an animated cartoon, and each 3" vegetable has a personality that makes it a candidate for a collector's shelf. There are 3 different pairs; each is $1. Set of 3 pairs, $2.75. Ppd. Bryn Mawr Gifts, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

THEY GO TO YOUR HEAD!

When you're shopping at the supermarket or lunching at the beach club you'll discipline your curls with a golden bobby pin topped with a good-as-gold burnished leaf. $1 for 3. And when you're cocktail partying or waltzing under the stars, you'll wear the silvery pin with the crown of rhinestones. $1 for 2. Ppd. Tax included. RADIANT BEAUTY. For several weeks now we've lived with this Colonial Hurricane Lamp, and every day we love it more. We can't explain it exactly. The design is anything but flamboyant; rather, it has a quiet quality. Shining, solid brass rims the crystal chimney, forms the saucer base. 15" high, 8½" in diameter, it's $23.50 and worth every penny. Ppd. Valley Forge Braziers, 1624 First Ave., York, Pa.

KOKESHI LANTERNS, for a patio barbecue or a Fourth of July dance on the lawn, are made of gay colored rice paper over accordion wire bodies. They fold flat for storage, spring up to a full 9" high for stringing over a line of small light bulbs. $1 for 2; $2.89 for 6. Ppd. Foster House, 430 S. Jefferson, Peoria, Illinois.

STRAW HAT CIRCUIT. Time has come to play at the beach, dig in the garden, walk in the country, drive a convertible. Here's the hat to do it in! Rhinestone-sparkled Madagascar straw rolls up to about the size of a cigarette package, fits in your purse! In natural, turquoise, salmon, gold, orange or multi-colors; one size fits all. $3.95 ppd. Elizabeth McCaffrey, Dept. B-7, Orange, New Jersey.

UNCOVERS HIDDEN TREASURE!

Free Catalog Guides Housewife!

Mrs. J. Pasch, 6125 Kenwood, Chicago, was hiding a fortune right in her living room. It was her expensive furniture — kept out of sight under old-fashioned slip covers. Then a Free Catalog showed her how to keep her furniture clean yet let its original beauty be seen always. Now her sofa and chairs are dressed up in fitted super-clear plastic covers.

Made of new satin-smooth "Window Clear" plastic fabric, every bit of the upholstery color and pattern shows through these covers. The durable extra-heavy plastic is non-porous so dust, dirt and liquids can't get through. They give perfect protection and save hours of work. "It's wonderful to see my beautiful furniture all the time and not worry that it will get 'dirty,'" says Mrs. Pasch. "The covers fit perfectly and they're so inexpensive. Every woman who cares about her furniture should see your catalog."

To protect your furniture, write today for FREE CATALOG. Shows over 150 easy-to-order styles including latest Bumper styles. You also get FREE Sample of super-clear plastic. HOUSE OF SCHILLER, 180 N. Wacker, Dept. H8-9, Chicago 6, Illinois.

Made by Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company ... the world's finest insulating glass "TWINDOW"

- Keeps rooms more comfortable winter and summer
- Reduces window fogging and icing
- Cuts heating and cooling costs
- Provides the most convenient form of storm window insulation
- Wide range of standard sizes

MORE and more American home buyers, as well as those interested in remodeling their present houses, are insisting upon the use of Twindow for every room—because they know that this twin-glass windowpane, with insulation built in, gives a lift to living. They know, too, that Twindow offers substantial savings in heating and cooling costs, minimizes cold air drafts, reduces fogging on roomside surface of the glass, effectively muffles outside noises, saves labor of putting up storm windows in the fall and taking them down in the spring.

That is why we urge you to make it a must to have this world's finest insulating windowpane installed — whether you are building, buying or remodeling. When you do this, your home will acquire a new dimension of spaciousness, light, comfort and beauty. It's really luxury living at a price that's less than you think!

WARMER ROOMS. Twindow's exceptional insulating properties seal out cold air in the winter, keep your rooms more evenly comfortable ... more healthful.

COOLER ROOMS. In the same way, Twindow's remarkable insulation cuts down on the amount of outdoor heat entering your rooms in hot summer weather.

TWO TYPES OF TWINDOW®

METAL EDGE. Ideal for large windows and where maximum insulation is needed most. Constructed of two panes of  $\frac{1}{4}$ " clear-vision Plate Glass, with a  $\frac{1}{2}$ " sealed air-space between. Exclusive stainless steel frame means no bare edges to chip or mar. These Twindow insulating glass units are sturdy as well as beautiful.

ALL-GLASS SEALED EDGE. Precision fabricated unit, smooth, all-glass welded edge, high insulating value make this the favorite for smaller window openings in every room. Constructed of two panes of  $\frac{1}{8}$ " Pennvernon—"the quality window glass"—with  $\frac{3}{16}$ " air-space between. Moderately priced.

DECORATOR'S DIARY

Observations on the state of the home furnishings market by a decorator who covers the showrooms with notebook and camera

Mrs. Haynes Winthrop could probably underwrite custom-made bedspreads for every bed in New Jersey, where she spends her summers high on a hill overlooking the Delaware Valley, in a genuinely hospitable late 19th-century country mansion. There must be 15 bedrooms in the house, most of them high-ceilinged, airy, bay-windowed.
All are comfortably patterned in garden-flower wallpapers which are as essentially part of the quality of this old place as the heavy, old-fashioned white wicker on the porches and the Adirondack chairs by the tennis courts.

Each of these bedrooms is usually occupied every week end from June through October, for the Winthrops are a gregarious older couple, blessed with gregarious children and something like ten gregarious teen-age grandchildren. The Winthrop bedding takes quite a beating during the course of the season.
Besides the wear and tear, there's the necessity for constant washing which is pretty fatiguing to most fabrics, as we were aware when we decided to refurbish the rooms with bedspreads.

"I wish I could shut my eyes and cover the whole business in denim," said Mrs. Winthrop. "But I do so want to keep the rooms looking as crisp and freshly laundered as they used to in the old days when we had hem-stitched French voile spreads and a permanent laundress on the premises. I've been wondering if I could find some ready-made spreads in some of those new synthetic fibers . . ."

Well, her wonderment was my command, because I, too, had been wondering whether the new, easily washed, quick-drying, reputedly carefree fabrics could actually provide the well-made, substantial good looks that clients of Mrs. Winthrop's caliber demand. They can, of course, as I learned on a visit to Richard Loeb's showroom.

Here I found the lovely answer in an embroidered and quilted bed-spread in sheer white Dacron (the

Quilted Dacron Bedspread

name for du Pont's polyester fiber, specially notable for its non-wrin-kling, its easy and quick washing and drying, and the way it keeps its shape and finish after laundry).
The top surface of the spread actually amounts to a summer quilt, filled, marvelous to relate, with Dacron fiber batting, so that the filling and its covering both share the same kind of easy washability and quick drying. The quilt pattern is a delicate puckering that outlines white, Schiffler-embroidered star-shape flowers and their twining stems. The bedspread skirt, gathered around the quilted top, is sheer Dacron, clear as organdy.

For the windows, we discovered we could duplicate the embroidered sheer in multiple-tier floor-length white curtains. So we did.

Wish I'd been the first to think of the device that turns Margery and Bill Wolfe's 40-foot living room into the best party room I've seen this year. Practically one wall of the room is glass, opening onto an unroofed terrace, and beyond this the land slopes down to one of the prettiest little lakes in Westchester. That's the view.

When I first saw the room on a spring afternoon I thought how ideally it filled the polite requirements of a ladies' tea party which was going on there at that moment. Its colors are of the champagne, straw and chamois school, against walls painted in that sophisticated grayed green which is like the silvery color of olive leaves.

In color and atmosphere the room had such quiet mannerliness that I hardly noticed any of its architectural details, least of all the gray-green battery of trim louvered doors that lines one entire living room wall.

A week later I had the surprise of my life. The room, with curtains drawn and all lamps lighted, was giving an evening bon voyage shower. There was the usual clutter of ribbons and wrappings, the champagne glasses and the trays of hors d'oeuvres, and then, all of a sudden, there was a crowd around the piano. I did a double take. What piano? "Where did that come from?" I asked the host. "It wasn't here last week." "Sure it was," he said, "only you couldn't see it behind its closed doors."

It turns out that this little spinet piano lives in a closet all its own, built into the wall and covered with louvered doors which open and fold back flat against the wall. The piano bench is lightweight enough to be easily parked on top of the piano while it isn't being used. The piano can be played right where it is or, since it's equipped with easy-rolling casters, can be moved anywhere on the downstairs floor, including the terrace.

"What'll they think of next?" I asked. "For instance, there must be something else unseen behind the rest of these louvered doors."

"You don't suppose that we are bereft of a television, a movie screen or high-fidelity equipment," said Bill, "and where do you think we stash the record albums and the sheet music?"

Opening the rest of the louvered closet wall, he disclosed the neat, now-you-see-it-now-you-don't placement of all these vital essentials to modern recreation.

"Whose idea was all this?" I asked.

"Mine," said Bill proudly.

Sometimes you wonder if you're in the right business.

Now the season of the window blind is upon us. It isn't as if we don't need something to control light and privacy all year round, but people just seem to get more conscious of this necessity, come spring and summer. Mrs. Nash, not the most tractable of my clients, called up rather assertively last month to demand I give my immediate attention to the blind situation in her Sutton Place apartment. "I don't like blinds at all, you know," she said, as if it were all my fault. "They look like big, gawking, blank faces, but I can't put up with that morning sun burning into the Kirman rug you persuaded me to buy for the living room."

I conjured up a picture of her living room—gray-beige painted walls, brightened by a few extremely good Japanese panels, a gray-beige hand-woven raw silk on sofas and armchairs, a limed walnut grand piano in the window and the most beautiful silky, restrained patterned rug that ever was loomed in or out of its native Iran.

Sudari Prints

The Frederick Charles Products' amenable Sudari Prints came right to mind. There are slender-slatted bamboo blinds which can be painted any color in Glidden's Dramatone paint range and then patterned with a choice of silk-screen-printed motifs (stars, fleur-de-lis and Mayan, Japanese and Polynesian designs) to harmonize with the decoration in practically any kind of room. They may also be custom-colored and printed with custom-order motifs. They come in either roll-up or traverse-curtain style. They may hang as draperies or wall coverings. They may be lined in sateen, chintz or, for a smart shower curtain, in vinyl film. And, what's more, to banish all danger of the "blank-face" look, it is possible to stencil reproductions of the same motifs on the walls surrounding the blinds or elsewhere in the room.

A call to San Francisco to Dameron and Kaufmann, who distribute these blinds, brought a sampling of stock motifs, a price list, and the specific information I needed to put Mrs. Nash in a good humor for days running. Blinds and two walls, ever so sparsely patterned with oriental characters, printed in a color about four tones darker than the gray-beige walls, have actually done even more than solve the lady's problem for the summer. So entranced is she that she's talking now of leaving the room just as it is all the year round, blinds and all.

As I was turning a rack in the print department at Cheney-Greeff's showroom, I was stopped in my tracks by a flash of iris and aqua and turquoise. Immediately I was reminded of the violet-blue eyes and gently curling pale blond hair of Lydia Calvert who, let's face it, never dresses herself or her house in any colors but the most sympathetic shades of blue. One look at this happy mélange of her favorite colors, in a spirited patterning of summertime flower bouquets, and she'd be inspired, I was sure, to do over that ocean-facing living room at Watch Hill. It is honestly in need of a change from its rather severe navy blue and teal blue sailcloth of a few years back.

So I invited her for lunch, waved the sample length at her, and am now embarking on a project involving the matching of vinyl plastic upholstery material to the three basic blues in the fabric. We're covering the white wrought-iron chairs in the dining area in a medley of these blues, all to surround a white iron table; we'll paint the walls and floors white; we'll fling a few aquamarine nylon tufted rugs where needed—at the sofa, under the dining group, in the two window-seat areas that look out to sea over the white-railed sun deck. Sofas and armchairs and a kind of half-way café curtain I've been dreaming up to create some kind of privacy from the eyes of beach-trotters without blocking the view of the blue, blue ocean—well, these will naturally be of our beguiling flowery blue fabric.

And, believe it or not, this turns out to be cretonne, of all things—a fabric I had always associated with the ugliest of mud-brown patterns or with the wild draperies that used to hang in the store windows of gypsy fortune tellers. Cretonne, the polite young man in the showroom said, is not the name of any one type of pattern, but simply means printed patterns on certain cotton weaves, usually with a natural color background. But freshly colored, imaginatively drawn subjects are now typical of cretonne patterning, just as in all printed fabrics.

This particular one comes in five different and delicious color combinations, including a copper-gold-mustard that would make your heart sing. Its name is "Betsy" and it's one of the Plaisance group of 100% cotton cretonnes; the repeat of the bouquet is 25 inches deep; the width of the fabric is 50 inches; its cost is less than $6 a yard.

"Whatever are you trying to do?" I asked Mrs. Simpson in alarm, for I had come upon her surrounded by scraps of wallpaper, wielding a pair of scissors and looking the way you do when you can't get the thread through a needle.

"I am attempting to wallpaper a dirty, smudgy old switchplate which I can't stand to look at one minute longer," she answered. "This belongs on the dining room wall and I can't think of anything more unsavory than the sight of finger-marks staring you in the face while you're eating your dinner. But how in the world do you paste paper over this and still screw it to the wall without having the holes show?"

DECORATOR'S DIARY

"A good question," I replied, "but you don't screw the plate to the wall after it's papered. You cover the plate while it's on the wall, and then with a thin, thin knife try to fold the paper edges over the edges of the plate. And that isn't easy. Besides you have to cut the paper so that the plate covering will match up with the pattern on the wall.

The switch itself is boxed in a removable Plexiglas casing. You can cover the switch with paper or a paint color to match the surrounding walls, then snap on the Plexiglas casing and there's your unobtrusive matching switchplate. The installation of this one-button control can be made on regular household current."

In the whole list of home furnishings elegancies, hardly any category seems more psychologically sumptuous than flocked wallpaper. What could be a richer covering for a wall than the princely luxury of velvet, which is what flocking looks like?

So, when Martha McAllister called to tell me she had a yen for some flocked paper in her new dining room, I was delighted at the prospect of a trip to look over the wallpaper market.

"Meet me at the Fine Arts showroom in half an hour," I said, for this firm has lately produced a new Flocking Collection.

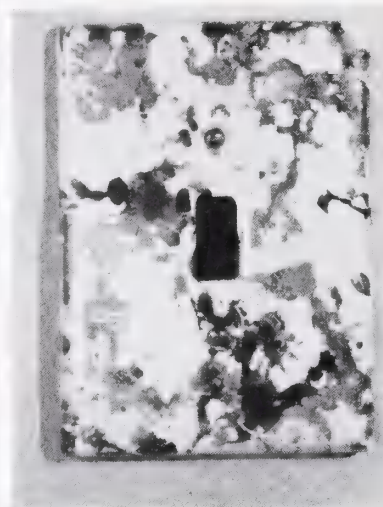

"Great," said Martha, "but please educate me first. I know what flocking looks like, but what exactly is it?" So I told her, reading slyly from some literature I just happened to have handy.

Flocking of paper began way back in the 17th Century to simulate the costly cut velvets and brocades with which princes and potentates decked their walls. It consisted in the old days of painting the paper with an adhesive and then hand-applying a tiny nap of short, stiff, woolen fibers. The paper then resembled velvet. Nowadays, a lot of commercially flocked paper is made by the mile with the flocking attaching itself to the paper mechanically. But in the fine hand-made flocked papers there's actually little change in the old handwork involved except that the nap or pile is now likely to be of cut nylon or rayon fibers.

Modern flocking differs from the original in design, too. Instead of every square inch of paper being coated with a velvety finish, usually only motifs or separated patterns are flocked. This means that the paper takes on the dimension and quality of depth. It may catch light interestingly, as velvety, plushy naps do, and so create a surface that intrigues the eyes.

Besides this, separated flocked patterns reveal their backgrounds, leaving the paper itself exposed.

Marbelized China Switchplate

"But maybe wallpaper isn't the solution here at all. Your buffet and serving table tops are marble. Well, Abels Wasserberg has a compatibly black, white and gilt hand-painted china switchplate, 3¾" by 5¼", that may cure your dining-room problem in a flash. All you need do is attach it to the wall, wipe off with a damp cloth on cleaning day. Anyway, marble patterns tend to hide smudges. But you could have roses or dogwood or a harlequin pattern, too.

"Or perhaps you'd find it easier to work with one of the marble patterns of sticky-backed vinyl film, like Contact or Decoreze. Before you remove its paper backing, you can cut out a piece to fit over the switchplate precisely, because the paper backing is marked in inches for easy measuring. The stuff goes on like adhesive tape, peels off when you want it to and, since it's plastic, can be kept clean with a damp cloth. A brand-new transparent Contact is on the market now, so you might use this over a wallpapered switchplate.

"Or you can try the newest device of all, the Taplite, a switch and switchplate Henry Dreyfuss designed for Minneapolis Honeywell. It works with only a touch of your finger (or elbow, if your hands are full) on one single gold button, which turns lights on or off.

How to enjoy a symphony—VI

Born on the wave of last century's romanticism, Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" continues to grow in popularity and appeal

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

Timing is important in the world of art as well as in life.

A work of art has to be planted at the right time and into a prepared and receptive ground, if it is to make its effect, if it is to blossom into immediate popularity. If the ground is frozen, the public climate inclement, the work lies dormant.

Tchaikovsky's Pathétique was timed right. It appeared in the last decade of the nineteenth century (1893), when that part of the world which was receptive to art was ready for something "pathetic." It marked the culmination, the period and paragraph, of a century which has been called "the romantic century."

In the center of that century stood Chopin, who died in 1849, and Berlioz. David Copperfield was published in 1850. In the latter half of the century, as industrial and social problems became severer, darker colors were mixed into palette. The gentle roses were still used, but a few gray smudges began to show. Life was still romantic, though there was no denying its sadness. Arcadia was far away. One knew how far. One saw the ugliness. And one sighed.

Now the Pathétique came on the musical scene. It was an expression of romantic world-weariness, of what Rosa Newmarch, Tchaikovsky's biographer, has called "the attractive luxury of woe." It suited people who were sorry for themselves and who saw the sadness of life while enjoying life to the fullest. This music expressed—and wonderfully well—the charm of suffering, the longing for longing.

Two other factors, aside, of course, from its great intrinsic worth, helped the Pathétique to immediate popularity. One was the title, which proved just as effective here as it had proved for Beethoven's sonata. There seems to be nothing like a good title to aid a romantic symphony—the public can understand what the work "means." Incidentally, the title was bestowed on the Sixth Symphony not by the composer, but by Tchaikovsky's brother, Modeste.

Yet another circumstance occurred to help give the symphony romantic fame and set it apart. The Pathétique was first performed in St. Petersburg under the composer's direction on October 28th, 1893. A few days after, on November 2nd, the celebrated composer was dead, having contracted cholera by drinking a glass of unboiled

How to leave home and like it

By MARION COUGH

Choose your mountains, from Wyoming to North Carolina.

FRITZ HENLE

We can remember a time when any normal red-blooded American's vacation was simply a choice between the mountains or the seashore some time during the months of July or August. And once you got away off there—50 miles or so from home—you stayed put until sufficiently relaxed to come back. A trip to Europe was so fraught with the packing of trunks, bon voyage parties and purple prose by the society editor, that the principals often spent the rest of their lives thinking they were something special. As for crossing the continent, coast to coast—here was a test of intrepidity for you! (“It was so hot crossing the desert, we had to keep the train windows down!”) And as for those Marco Polos who did it in their own cars—“Well, sir, we started to cross the prairie about four in the morning . . . had to carry enough food, water and gasoline with us for the whole trip, of course. . . .”

This is why there's something (Please turn to page 118)

House Beautiful's
PACE SETTER HOUSE for 1956

showing that remodeling is often the best way

Why we chose a

Remodeled House

1956 Pace Setter

This year HOUSE BEAUTIFUL presents as its Pace Setter a house that was built more than 40 years ago and recently remodeled. Every year we choose a house which is a striking example—a living, working model—of the new high standards in building, furnishing, decorating, landscaping and all other aspects of homemaking.

Since 1948 we have chosen new houses. Why, in 1956, have we selected a remodeled house as our important Pace Setter?

Because twenty million homes in America are more than 30 years old. Because many of their owners want to live better right where they are, by partially or completely remodeling their homes. To them we say, (Continued overleaf)

From the living room of this newly remodeled house one looks toward gardens in several directions: on the left, through the lanai toward patio garden, and, on the right, through dining room beyond fireplace wall toward deck and trees. Below is a view from entrance door, which opens into the lanai, toward the living room. Shoji-like panels may be drawn shut to close off the living room completely, if desired, or left open for greater spaciousness.

BEFORE

Symbolical of the sense of confinement in the house before remodeling is the view above of the former fireplace. Compare with same view to right. Note new, soaring ceilings, the sense of expansiveness and relaxed ease of living.

Why we chose a remodeled house . . . continued

A primary goal in remodeling was to provide specially designed backgrounds for the many treasures collected by the family over the years. Twelve rare plaques, for instance, were housed in four vertical sections of the bookshelves. To the right of the fireplace is a recess for an 18th-century desk. Other fine pieces were similarly provided for.

"This is your issue." To the more than a million who are building new homes from the ground up, we also say, "This is for you, as well." And to all those whose plans include no more than some refurnishing or redecorating, we say, "This is for you, too!"

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's Pace Setter for 1956 is a remodeled house, for many excellent reasons:

First: because remodeling is often the best way to achieve the best in living, when there is a good basis for remodeling and when the planning and execution are of a high, Pace-Setter quality, as here.

Second: because 1956 has been declared the year of Operation Home Improvement—a great nationwide, year-long drive on the part of government and industry, home-builders and (Please turn the page)

homemakers to better the homes of America. We launched this drive with our issue of February 1956. Now we are climaxing the year's effort with an issue devoted to a Pace Setter which is a remodeled house.

Why this particular remodeled house?

Because it beautifully illustrates the fact that when there are good reasons for taking an older house and bringing it up to date, the results are often superb—as good as, and sometimes even better than, building a new house on entirely new grounds.

Certainly such was the case here. Since 1910 this house and these grounds were the home of the same family. They loved their garden and their neighborhood, they were deeply attached to the house itself—its memories, its treasures, its history, its associations.

It was a large, rambling house with ideal possibilities for a large, active family of six. The owners, who incidentally prefer remaining anonymous, and their architect, Morgan Stedman. (Continued overleaf)

Almost the entire story is contained in the contrast between the before picture (above) and the after (right). Before there was a breakfast room outside the dining room. Now there is a deck, dramatizing the new indoor-outdoor feeling of the remodeled house, its sweeping inclusion of great oaks on the north side. Curtains can be drawn across east windows.

BEFORE

wanted to achieve three goals in the remodeling: (1) retain as much as possible of the original structure; (2) at the same time make it more suitable for the advantages of contemporary living; and (3) provide new and appropriate backgrounds for the personally valued collections of books, paintings, antiques and objects of art acquired by the family over the years. Many of these cherished items are shown above and to our left. It would be well to note, in passing, how handsomely the third goal was achieved in the remodeling and redecorating scheme. (Please turn the page)

Just outside the living room is this balcony-like section of the deck with its built-in seat. Since the deck extends around the house to the kitchen, service is simple with rolling carts. Note delightful play of the two patterns in the dishes and cushions. Note too the Hibachi set into table top for use in charcoal cooking or, as here, to keep casseroles nice and hot.

New among the cherished family treasures is this

Why we chose a remodeled house . . .

Change for the sake of change is certainly one of the least important reasons for remodeling. Here, however, change was decidedly for the better. Fine as the old house was, it did not take full advantage of the long, graceful views, and many of the aspects of outdoor living that appeal so strongly today were not easily enjoyed in the unremodeled home.

On the next pages we shall show in detail exactly what was done to accomplish all this, but here, with photographs of the new deck before us, the inviting beauty of such contemporary living seems undeniable. In the midst of a garden that only time and patience can create, the family now partakes of outdoor meals and other pleasures with a freedom previously denied.

So, a quick comparison of the before pictures with the after ones tells in brief the story of this remodeling and indicates why we have chosen it as this year's Pace Setter. A closer study of all its parts will tell even more. There is a lesson for us, and guidance too, in every part, whether we plan to build anew or to buy and remodel, to move to a better house or to stay right where we are and adapt our old home to the brighter, newer purposes of our todays and tomorrows.

New deck is a major feature in the remodeling. It made possible terrace-like outdoor living, even though major rooms are well above ground level. Now one can move in and out easily to fully enjoy nearby oaks and distant trees.

stainless steel (in the knife blades) are strikingly set off by black handles.

Very rarely have we ever been so enthusiastic or excited as we are about this freshly designed, truly pace-setting silver flatware, as beautiful a treasure as any in this year's Pace Setter. The graceful curving handles, made of ebony-black nylon, are firmly joined to solid silver and are guaranteed to be unaffected by temperatures normally met in home dishwashers. Each piece is a pleasure to have and to hold. This new "Contrast" silver is made by Lunt Silversmiths.

Progress with Permanence

Remodeling, as in our 1956 Pace Setter, is in the living spirit of American tradition. It means building into an old inherited framework new means for a richer, fairer life, while preserving a sense of the solid past

The passionate debate between traditionalists and modernists seems to come down to this choice of false alternatives: Do you want a sense of permanence or do you want the advantages of progress? To both groups we at HOUSE BEAUTIFUL have steadily replied: Why not have progress with permanence?

Inherent, of course, in the idea of a Pace Setter House is the idea of progress. But also part of every Pace Setter has been an equally strong sense of permanence, or, if you prefer, of tradition and continuity. When, as here, our Pace Setter is a house originally built more than 40 years ago, and remodeled wholly in the spirit of the original, there is bound to be a sense of continuity with the past. Two generations of the same family have impressed themselves upon it. However, even when our Pace Setter has been a brand new house with a brand new garden, as it has been every year since 1948, it still has the same sense of permanence. This has been the result of building in the spirit of the land, the climate, the neighborhood, the people who were to live within it. In every case the new Pace Setter has taken on the character of its native ground, has become a part of its setting, as if it had always been there. Each time the architect has responded sensitively to the site, the region, the future owners, with a design adequate to and worthy of them, and so has created a house with all the products of progress and all the sense of security of belonging. For all our Pace Setters have belonged to the land, to the people, to that region of America that inspired them.

So true has this been, not only of our Pace Setters, but of the best of contemporary (Continued overleaf)

BEFORE

Original house contained much floor space, but little convenience for today's living. It was dark and gloomy and circulation between rooms was badly planned. Living room served as entrance hall and passage to other rooms. Bedroom wing has two stories, two bedrooms and sitting room upstairs.

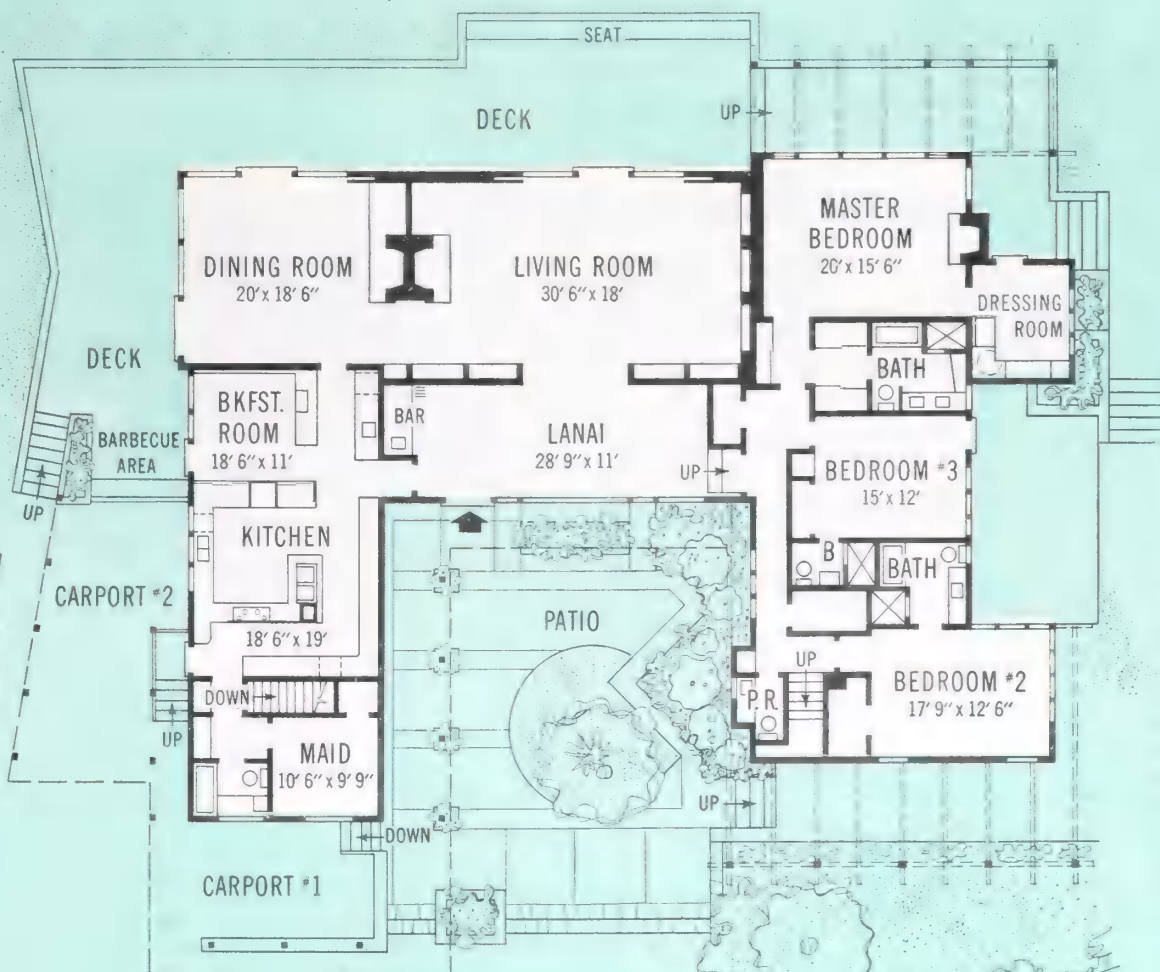

BEFORE

Charm of old house was due chiefly to its established surroundings. Remodeling transformed once-dark rooms into light-filled space by replacing small, heavy windows with big sliding glass doors. New, broad deck extends from master bedroom at left to kitchen at far right, replacing former porch, which had darkening effect on rooms inside and was not as terrace-like.

AFTER

New plan gives much greater spaciousness to living areas. Kitchen and breakfast room are separate, but have direct association with rest of house. New lanai connects both wings, keeping traffic out of living room. Bedroom wing is little changed; note new bath and powder room.

architecture, that we felt—and announced—here was the emergence of an American character, which we examined in all of its promising manifestations. Along with the maturing of American fiction, cinema, music and painting was this tremendous story of architecture unmistakably American.

As one studies the house on these pages it seems clearer and clearer that we are witnessing something with the authentic imprint of our country's culture. We cannot call it modern. And we cannot call it traditional, in the sense of Cape Cod or Williamsburg architecture which has been wrongly held to be the tradition of American building.

There is New England here and California as well. There is the past and there is the present, the latter growing out of the former. What, after all, (Continued overleaf)

BEFORE

To provide sheltered parking at house instead of in distant garage, two carports were placed at right angles at end of service wing without moving drive. Shelter at left also serves as covered service entrance. One at right leads directly to entrance patio beyond. Laundry and storerooms are on lower level, kitchen and maid's room above.

BEFORE

Entire north wall of dining room is glazed to make beauty of old oaks part of room. New redwood deck extends from breakfast room to right of dining room along entire north and east sides of house, giving interior close relationship with beautiful old garden and visual sense of freedom never dreamed of 40 years ago, when the house was built.

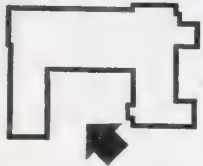

BEFORE

Patio was filled, raising ground level up to floor of lanai and living room. This carefully designed transition between garden and interior gives house a new intimacy with outdoors. Built-in wood planting boxes accentuate structural pattern of covered walk at entrance. Because garage is detached from house, carports were added under roof extension for closer access.

BEFORE

Because established trees, shrubs and vines were preserved during construction, Pace Setter is a completely contemporary house, still graced with vines and planting that have a 10-year growth. These old wisteria vines were carefully protected on temporary props while trellis was rebuilt. They serve to keep this high west wall cool in summer.

could be more American than for one generation to add a wing or in any way enlarge the home of a previous generation? What could be more American than to take an inherited framework and build into it new means for a newer, fairer way of life to accord with progress? Indeed, what could be more American than the very notion of progress?

A belief in progress is an expression of confidence in the future of one's country, of one's family, of one's self. And such a belief is always based on a sense of security about the past, which makes progress possible. There is, then, a spiritual and moral basis for the very look of an American home: It has the character of a living oak—it seems to have grown to its present size and further growth seems a planned part of its design. To add a new wing is to further complete it.

This is the simple story of our Pace Setter. It was built around 1910 in the San Francisco Bay area and added to again in 1923. It was remodeled in the last few years. Members of the same family have lived in it since the beginning.

To appreciate the feeling of the present owners you should know that they had both spent their childhood playing in this house, walking in the shade of its great oaks. They had been childhood sweethearts and had grown up together—he in the house itself, which had been built by his father, and she in the neighborhood. His father had filled it with rare works of art, books and furniture, which he had collected on his trips in America and Europe. (Please turn to page 104)

BEFORE

South side of house shows little exterior change. Simple character and materials of old house were maintained throughout remodeling, so no sharp line exists between new and old. First floor contains master bedroom and two daughters' bedrooms, second floor has guest room, boy's room, children's play room (see page 85). Planting has been rearranged to give more privacy to ground-floor bedrooms. Paved terrace in the middle is outside the daughters' bedrooms, each of which has direct access to it.

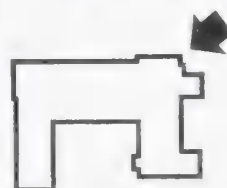

BEFORE

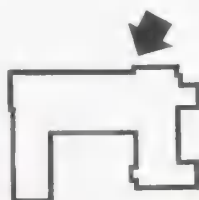

Reconstruction (above) included opening up east wall of master bedroom to create glass wall shown left. Wistaria, moved forward when deck was built, will again be trained over trellis outside bedroom windows to reduce sky glare.

Former sleeping porch is now enclosed dressing-room-study off bedroom. The guest room is on floor above.

BEFORE

East side of house (above) had long porch, too narrow for use. Railing and heavy planting formed barriers that cut off house from garden and spectacular view. New redwood deck, broad and sunny, provides delightful living space where garden can be enjoyed and extends visual size of glass-walled rooms within. Long horizontal lines of deck and trellis help create horizontal lines that minimize the height of building on side where ground slopes away.

The Master Bedroom

In the parents' room, the sense of serenity which pervades the rest of this house becomes a sense of retreat.

Here the elders have a place of seclusion and quiet

By now you have certainly become aware of the fine quality of placidity which permeates this house, which indeed seems to have been part of its architecture even 45 years ago. But any house inhabited in 1956 by four children, their parents, servants and guests is bound to be a lively place. And so, as a matter of survival as individuals and as a serene twosome, the parents of this household have made their bedroom-dressing room a place of adult retreat.

Physically, this room is directly next to the daughters' bedrooms on the first floor of the bedroom wing. And the new broad deck, which serves it as a private terrace, is a continuation of the same deck which opens off the living room. So it can hardly be said that the master bedroom withdraws "cold-bloodedly" from the rest of the house. Physically, however, its layout and furnishings create the same effect as a gentle "No Trespassing" sign.

Part of its quality of seclusion comes from the fact that the room is up a short stairway from the lanai, high and detached from the ground at a point on the site where the land slopes away. The eye here is level with the branches of the oak trees in the garden below. And looking east and north past the garden, a magnificent view of the valley is opened up, and this too creates a lofty sense of distance and separation.

The remodeling in this part of the house was not extensive. To bring in the superb view and to foster the feeling of spaciousness, the old small windows were replaced by broad walls of glass. Most of the up-to-date feeling was achieved by the furnishings. Actual floor space and wall space were added by rearranging the locations of closets and enclosing part of a former corridor.

(The adjoining bath and dressing room, which is also a study room, are shown overleaf.)

Two side panels of fixed louvers at each end of new glass wall permit ventilation while draperies are drawn. Jalousies outside louvers can be opened or shut from inside.

room on page 106*

Upholstered chairs, tiled fireplace, choice art and bibelots give the bedroom livable function of a sitting room. Eventually deck will be sheltered by trellised wisteria. Draperies may be drawn across entire window.

View through window-wall below intensifies the far-off, peaceful feeling engendered by room, enriches it with a panorama of green trees and blue sky. Silk peach wallpaper makes quiet background for etchings.

The Master Bath, Study and Dressing Room

To bring the bathing, clothing storage and dressing areas of the master bedroom so elegantly up to date required more than the installation of new and beautiful equipment. What produced the luxuriously efficient bath and conveniently equipped dressing-room-study was an imaginative reconsideration of the present owners' needs and tastes, and a reappraisal of all possible available space in the old house. This seems such an obvious procedure, when you consider the happy results it produces, that you wonder why it is so frequently overlooked by remodelers, who seem simply to superimpose new fixtures on an old layout.

Compare the former floor plan on page 64 with the plan below to see the realignment of spaces. A former hallway and hall linen closet were incorporated in the master bedroom area; the closet space was given to the bathroom. The closet door became the new bathroom entry. There are now wardrobes on each side as you enter the present bathroom. With the elimination of two former doors in the bedroom wall—one to the bath, the other to a closet—the new bathroom and bedroom acquired unbroken wall space. On the next page you can see how a sleeping porch became the dressing-room-study.

St. Clair Fleuri marble sheathes walls and shower stall, covers floors, is shaped to contours of counters. Inlaid brass strips add decoration at joints of marble. Perfectionist detailing is everywhere—in built-in marble shower seat, moisture-resistant shower lighting, heat lights, ventilation fans, and rectangular plaques above twin lavatories which are turnabout holders for toothbrushes and glasses. All fittings and hardware are either gold-plated or brass.

Dressing Room

A re-evaluation of a small sleeping porch resulted in this generously equipped dressing room for the master of the house, and furnished him with the additional luxury of a study and hobby room in the most remote quarter of the household. It even provided space enough for a desk and filing cabinet.

Tailored to its owner's requirements, the clothing storage space is an excellent example of how much can be comfortably accommodated in a small area, without cramming or make-shift devices. Instead of coats and trousers hanging together in the same closet, wasting valuable lower closet space, here one closet is completely filled with a double tier of jackets. A wardrobe of ties hangs on swinging racks which fold flat against the inside of the closet door. Then, by an ingenious adaptation of the Lazy-Susan principle of revolving shelves and racks, an otherwise useless corner of the room has become a closet large enough to store 24 pairs of hanging trousers and 20 or more pairs of shoes, all handily available.

Wardrobes, ventilated with pretty louvered doors, provide the mistress of the house with graduated trays for accessories, lingerie, sweaters and shoes, and generously sized niches for handbag storage. This one is opposite the door to the bathroom, where she has her dressing table and additional closet space. Lights go on automatically.

Lazy Susan revolving trouser-and-shoe rack uses otherwise wasted corner space. Cupboard which holds typewriter, camera, flash equipment, and similar hobby materials was also designed to frame filing cabinets.

Since two walls are solidly filled with closet and cupboard space, the floor is freed for the placement of a desk and chair at a garden-viewing window. Access to deck from the master suite is through this study.

Everywhere in this remodeled house is the presence of deeply valued possessions of the past—paintings, prints, pieces of furniture—now snugly and securely at home in the structure, specially designed to dramatize their presence. They seem to form a bond between one generation and another.

Continuity with its own past

Fine, rare books, works of art and antique furniture long owned by the family make a living link between the old house and the new

Besides an architectural continuity, which resulted from carefully remodeling the structure in sympathy with the original forms, there is a continuity in the fine possessions carefully and lovingly chosen over the years, particularly by the owner's father, a knowledgeable amateur.

So deeply does the family feel about these treasures that, in the remodeling, the architect deliberately designed places to receive and feature them. The living room, for instance, was virtually built around twelve rare 16th-century Limoges plaques of blue and white enamel on metal.

The plaques were placed in four vertical sections of the bookshelves in rows of three each and dominate one entire end of the living room, as you can readily see on pages 76 and 56. The books themselves are (Please turn the page)

Along the wall between the living room and dining room are several generations' possessions: two Limoges plaques of the 16th century, an 18th-century Georgian chest and a Murano madonna of the 20th century. They go together like members of the same family.

The living room was virtually designed around these 16th-century Limoges plaques, all of which are part of the same series of twelve Biblical illustrations. They were built into four vertical sections of the bookcase, whose shelves contain rare, beautiful editions.

Continuity with its own past continued

The owner's father was particularly interested in collecting etchings, some of which are framed and hung in apt places, as here, along the hallway of the bedroom wing. They make this stretch of wall seem as though it had been specially planned for just such an impressive exhibition of prints. Certainly it seems an ideal, if casual, solution for them.

To the right of the fireplace in the living room is a recessed niche, deliberately prepared for this 18th-century pride of the family. An old English desk, its compartments seem to offer far more function than the so-called functional desks of modernism.

unusually choice, rare editions, beautifully bound and presented. Few walls look better than a wall of books, and here it is particularly true, especially for those who have an appreciative eye for incunabula and folios. One envies the children growing up among them.

The works of art include etchings and drawings, prints and paintings, statuary and modern terrazzo. They have their appointed places and are somewhat like the household gods of pagan times that stayed with a family for many years.

You see them as 15th-century primitives over one fireplace and as a modern mural over another. There are drawings by Jean Forain immediately above a display case of Bohemian glass (see page 60) and a long, impressive row of etchings which accompany you down a long corridor, as if the corridor were made for their special exhibition.

And often a special stage is set for them, as in the case of the Georgian desk in the recessed niche to the right of the living room fireplace or the old Spanish chest to the left of the fireplace in the dining room. The etchings too have their own special abode in the many shallow drawers beneath the bookshelves, where they quietly await an admirer.

Everywhere in this newly remodeled house is the presence of these treasures of the past, warm with love and kept warm by the renewed love of the present possessors.

The collection of etchings is too vast to be entirely framed and hung on the walls, so shallow drawers were built and installed below the book shelves to contain it. Here members of the family may select the ones they want to study closely at any particular moment.

Before remodeling, the Pace Setter was closed off from the magnificent trees, the splendid view across the valley.

The lovely old grounds were one big reason
they remodeled

One look at the wonderful old oaks, the long rolling lawn, the distant valley view, and one immediately understands why this family chose to remodel their old house rather than move away and build anew, even if it might have been less expensive and more efficient.

Forty-five years of partnership and patience with the garden—the last 25 with the same gardener—created the maturity and beauty of these trees, shrubs and plants. The soil, by now, is an open book and all is known and healthily growing. The problem was: How best to enjoy it? The smallish, heavy windows of the old house tended to close it from the view; going into the garden was an effort, and there were no real facilities for today's new attitude toward outdoor living.

The solution was: Make the house more open to the lovely garden and build a big broad deck so it could be enjoyed outdoors. In addition, a new kind of garden was designed and executed in the remodeled patio to the right. Here one moves freely from the house right into the garden, as if it were a roofless room. Two gardens are now being enjoyed. (Please turn to page 107)

An entirely new garden was created at the entrance court in the remodeling of the house. It meant making the house more garden-like at this point and the new, modern garden virtually a roofless room of the house. Now the Pace Setter has two gardens for various uses.

The new entrance garden was designed to be an important part of the house, besides providing a covered walk between carport and entry. Specially designed redwood tubs accent posts. The old wistaria vine was carefully preserved during remodeling and given a new trellis.

A room for a little lady

Remodeling has literally opened this nine-year-old's room to the garden outside, while indoors it surrounds her growing-up days with tangible objects of choice beauty

For nearly half a century this house has been gently alerting the young and old who live in it to the rich and varied beauty of the world about them. Even in the shadowy duskiess of its original rooms, in the carefully tended patina of dark wood paneling, a sense of orderliness seems to have come through. In the early patio, at least a start was made toward closer contact between indoors and outdoors. And unquestionably life indoors was a matter of daily contact with rare man-made beauty, with lovingly chosen furnishings and treasured works of art.

It is clear that the present owners, who knew this house as children, have learned its lessons well. Now, for the benefit of their own children, they have insisted that the remodeled house retain that same richness of esthetic opportunity.

Nowhere is this more apparent than in the enchanting room for a nine-year-old daughter. Through new panels of glass, replacing a former window, the garden's beauty is nearer than ever. Furnishings to delight a little girl are few, but they are fine: a Portuguese brass bedstead, an 18th-century sewing table, a bough of wallpaper blossoms like a Japanese print. Like her parents before her, the grandchild of the old house has been given an atmosphere of beauty in which to breathe and grow. (Please turn the page)

BEFORE

It is no easy assignment to design a room for a young lady whose allegiance is sometimes torn between her dear old dolls and the latest in ruffled petticoats. At nine years she still requires the quieting influence of cork floors; she needs a parking place for games and a desk by the window for crayoning. But she needs, perhaps even more than these mundane things, the prettiness of pink and blue, the grown-up luxury of a bathroom of her own, and a great, wonderful closet for the safekeeping of the clothes which have suddenly become matters of great moment.

In this delightful room so nice a balance has been struck between the needs of the child and the dreams of the young lady that you are conscious of neither emphasis. The childish things have not been offered patronizingly or obtrusively; the painted desk for crayoning might be in any guest room; the collection of unusual dolls would be interesting bibelots almost anywhere. And by the same token the adult features and fripperies have been conferred with good sense and restraint: Voile and velvet and the blossom-printed wallpaper are as appropriately youthful as they are adult. It follows, of course, that the room is timeless, and the lady to whom it belongs is naturally in love with everything in it.

← The room, designed for a nine-year-old, is furnished with mature, rather than juvenile, furnishings, but they are pretty enough to be on her level of appreciation. Door to right of bed (opposite) leads into new bathroom.

A wall of storage space is built behind two doors, including a dresser and niches for handbags "just like Mother's." Asymetric shelves displaying a doll collection are hung from perforated wallboard. Door to hall is at right.

The boy's room

After remodeling, this large rambling

A good training ground for organization has been made of this room with its engineered storage space, all planned for the acquisitiveness of a little boy with an inquiring mind. There's even a rope fire ladder stowed in the left section of the window seat (above). Desk space is plentiful and well lighted, with specific allocation for everything from a magnifying glass to model car and plane repair equipment. Wood surfaces are enameled. Walls are covered with grass cloth. Second floor shows what's possible by refurnishing alone.

The indoor playroom

The rumpus room shows some of the character of the original house, since nothing was changed. Wall surfaces, fabrics and casual furniture arrangement all show that this is a working playroom for the children and their friends. Even the dog has been allowed a favorite chair! Noise doesn't matter; the room is upstairs, away from adult living areas. Television is also housed in this room. This room and the boy's room are on second floor, where almost no remodeling was done, so we show no floor plan of this part of the house.

house was ideal for a large active family

The outdoor playground

Another reason for remodeling: The grounds were large enough to permit a sizable, serviceable children's playground. This was built on the slope down from the house, far enough away to free house from noise and yet near enough for a parent's surveillance. Redwood walls enclose tanbark-covered ground.

In Hawaii, a lanai is completely open on one side to the outdoors. Here the same effect is achieved by means of a wall of glass. In both there is a feeling of intimacy with nature.

The new Lanai — center of home fun

Space was taken from the patio to create a wholly new, multi-purpose room, the lanai.

Basic to the remodeling scheme was the creation of an entirely new room: the lanai, so called because one whole wall of glass seems to open it to the garden outdoors.

It is a room of many functions, but above all it makes the Pace Setter a self-contained center of home entertainment. Both the parents and the children exclaim that they don't want to go anywhere—their fun is right at home. And their visitors feel exactly the same way about it.

The lanai is a home-entertainment system in itself. The floor of teak-stained white oak, laid out in a decorative pattern with brass strips, is left uncarpeted so that it can be used as a dance floor. Which it is and with great success! The high-fidelity system is housed in the wall between the living room and (Please turn to page 117)

The shoji-like screens, which slide open or shut between lanai and living room, are covered with a specially woven, semi-open fabric. They make it possible to create a variety of different areas.

These four terrazzo-topped tables have inlays of brass strips similar to those in the oak floor. Tables may be used individually or as a group.

The small bar is fitted with clear lucite shelves and backed with a mirror. It is completely concealed, when not in use, by means of triple-hinged doors. It is one of many reasons the lanai is so versatile.

For the dining room, a great glass ovoid shows character of room itself—perfect simplicity. Placed as it is in front of a completely windowed wall, its open design in no way obscures the relationship of the room with the out-of-doors.

The lanai is a smaller, more intimate kind of room. Fixtures are consequently smaller in scale, with translucent shades to make a softer light. Bronze interior lights were designed and made by Boyd Lighting Co. especially for the house.

The Pace Setter's

High Lights and Hardware

The quality of completeness, so apparent in the Pace Setter, is due largely to the skillful handling and understanding of the importance of details. Lighting fixtures and hardware, minor elements, blend harmoniously with the architectural design. The materials and designs of these details add to it. For instance, bronze has been used with real understanding. Outside, bronze fixtures have weathered to a pleasant, permanent-looking green; indoors, the bronze glows against the polished woods. Such finesse does not necessarily demand custom designing. Selection of lights and hardware, stock or custom, should depend on the character of their design and material and on the places in which they will be used. These fixtures and hardware stand out, but do not intrude. They are the subtle and charming highlights of the house.

Living room has but one hanging fixture—this slender lantern, placed off center near fireplace. Pierced shade gives a soft glow for that end of room. Cove lighting, controlled by dimmers, supplements both living and dining fixtures.

Narrow covered walk leading to front entrance is lighted by lamps designed by the architect. Only a few inches deep, spaced at regular intervals along wall, they fit into pattern of boards. Sand-blasted glass diffuses light of four bulbs.

Designed for hospitals, the lower end of this graceful handle (far left) can be managed with wrist, freeing hands for carrying trays.

Massive entrance door hardware, designed by architect, is bronze, gives solidity needed for big double doors. Olive knuckle hinges are stock hardware; show how finesse can extend to the smallest detail of a good house.

The Breakfast Room

A charming spot for informal eating, this is a multi-purpose room where meals may be planned and flowers arranged without interfering with kitchen work going on elsewhere.

Only in an old house where space is plentiful is it possible to have a room of this size for informal meals. In remodeling the original service wing, what was formerly an old-fashioned pantry was enlarged and transformed into a charming breakfast room from which the entire family can enjoy the gardens and in which four young children can best "learn their manners."

The counter peninsula, which acts as a fourth wall separating the dining area from pantry traffic, has a built-in writing desk with surrounding shelves for cook-books, magazines and other reference material. Household details, such as planning menus and making out marketing lists, are handled here.

The adjoining passageway has a flower-arranging center with a stainless-steel sink and counter space, and a wall cabinet for containers and other supplies. Against the wall is a below-counter refrigerator for the children and just beyond is a dumb waiter which connects with the laundry on the level below. Here wood for the fireplaces can also be brought up. Floor plan shows how well this area was planned to link kitchen, breakfast room, dining room and lanai together.

Beyond peninsula, with its planning desk surrounded by shelves, is flower-arranging center with its own stainless-steel sink. Foot pedals control flow of water so that hands are free. Wall cabinet holds containers and other supplies. To left is below-counter refrigerator for children; just beyond is dumb waiter that connects with laundry room in basement below.

The ever-changing view of spacious gardens makes this breakfast room, which opens onto paved deck, a favorite place for informal meals. Wall covering is richly textured white woven paper from Japan, against which a collection of Austrian butter molds makes interesting decoration. Unit in foreground includes planning desk and provides excellent shelf and counter space, as well as shallow drawer and deep storage cabinets. Left, patina of antique pine table adds to beauty of imaginative settings for children.

Most striking, perhaps, of all the remodeled rooms are the kitchen and breakfast room, finished with mahogany-stained Douglas fir and papered with an all-over pattern whose colors are repeated in counter tops and vinyl-tile floor. Equipment is modern; pass-through even has infra-red food warmer.

The New Pace Setter Kitchen

Knowing what radical changes kitchens have undergone during the past 40 years, many women labor under the delusion that only a brand-new dwelling can ever have a real dream kitchen. The following four pages prove that this idea is false.

It takes more careful planning to create an efficient remodeled kitchen. But the new Pace Setter kitchen shows how it was done to fulfill all the demands for good living in the home of a young and lively family. This is the kitchen of a woman who runs the household, even though she employs several helpers. It's the kind of kitchen that is easy to run, even with limited help. Since it was in a part of the service wing difficult to reach, the first requirement for remodeling was that it be brought in more direct communication with (Please turn the page)

The cooking area of the kitchen is small enough to save steps. It has generous counter space and well-planned storage cabinets so supplies are within easy reach. Pantry borders it on two sides; adjoining it is the breakfast room. (See floor plan, left.)

Kitchen work area, which is rectangular in shape, has been arranged so it is out of traffic pattern of pantry bordering it on two sides. the living area of the house. As the floor plan shows, it is now accessible to dining room, living room and deck, and yet can be closed off from the rest of the house, if desired.

The actual working area of the kitchen has been arranged so that it is out of the traffic pattern. Small enough to be saving of steps, well-planned storage cabinets put everything within easy reach and provide sufficient counter space so that it never gets cluttered. Pass-throughs into the pantry and breakfast room are economical of time and steps. The built-in components, finished in stainless steel, include an electric range and two full-size ovens with a ventilator hood that extends over both the range and the oven doors. Built-in twin refrigerators have a combined capacity of 16.3 cubic feet. The detailed planning that went into the design is shown in such refinements as the cone-type hinges on base cabinets and the recessed pulls household, where so much entertaining is done at home. One vertical freezer stands in the pantry, as shown in floor plan on page 93. A large chest-type freezer in the storage room below holds additional supplies of basic frozen foods. A dumb-waiter makes it easy to send things up or down from storage room to kitchen. A similar arrangement connects the breakfast room to kitchen. A similar arrangement connects the breakfast room with the laundry and provides a lift for the wood used in fireplaces in the dining and living rooms.

Built-in components add to beauty and efficiency of kitchen. Base cabinet below counter cooking top has deep drawers that roll out smoothly on metal rods to put utensils within view and reach. Glass wall cabinet above hold variety of spices and condiments used in cooking. There is stainless steel counter to left of range for hot pans.

Wall cabinet at right of range holds staple packaged foods and built-in flour sifter. The laminated plastic covering most of the counter space repeats the deep blue of the all-over pattern of the ceiling wallpaper and the vinyl floor, providing a colorful accent in a kitchen of mahogany-stained Douglas fir and gleaming stainless steel.

The large windows above the stainless steel sinks and dishwasher afford a glorious view of the gardens and provide good light. This is augmented by a central skylight and artificial lighting concealed behind the aluminum honeycomb ceiling panels that give soft, shadow-free lighting.

Only by careful planning and analyzing of special needs could the original kitchen have been remodeled into this attractive and livable Pace Setter kitchen that meets so perfectly all the demands of this family. They enjoy entertaining at home and especially in this efficient, well-planned kitchen, that has helped make entertaining such an easy-going pleasure.

Space below sink is utilized well with chute to basement for disposal of trash and non-grindable waste. Large receptacles below are mounted on rolling platforms. Note that vinyl flooring is carried up over rounded base for ease of maintenance.

Storage wall with continuous counter has outlets strategically placed for use of appliances. Wall cabinets above and base cabinets below have adjustable shelves. Stools are stored in base cabinets where pull-out table serves as sit-down work surface for polishing silver, or as an afternoon tea and snack bar for the servants.

all the little things that make the big difference*

Flexibility in dining

Individual oak tables, designed by Eleanor Forbes, can be assembled in pairs to serve four, or in interesting groupings for special dinners, like the "U" arrangement (right) centered in front of the fireplace. Normally, units are grouped together to form one big table. Silk curtains are drawn electrically by motor controlled from wall switch (right). Automatic heat control, also shown, is reminder of progress in 40 years.

Variability in lighting

General illumination in living and dining rooms can range from a soft, even glow to brilliant intensity. Cove along both sides of rooms throws light over entire ceiling. Light in recessed slot of niche accents antique desk. These lights are adjusted to desired intensity by dimmer controls mounted in cabinetwork, like one shown at right. Throwing light up onto ceiling makes rooms seem higher.

Versatility in entertaining

Along with choice books and treasures from the past, pace-setting pleasures include high-fidelity equipment for recording and reproduction, housed in this wall between living and dining rooms. One record-changer is for party use and continuous play; second turntable is reserved for finer listening. Wire recorder has its own compartment.

Light control from afar

Relay system permits controlling lights throughout house from many switches in different rooms, thus saving steps. Where necessary, switches have signal lights to indicate when a distant circuit is turned on.

How the remodeled house must look to its guardian angel, whose conversation was overheard by Author T. V. Smith.

A philosopher looks at this Pace Setter home

Many intangibles—hard to name and therefore hard to talk about—go into making a home. These musings of one of America's foremost philosophers give you an inkling of what we mean

By T. V. SMITH Author of the forthcoming book
Live Without Fear

The only unchanged part of the old home is the carriage house, which you pass as you drive up the hill to the house several hundred yards away. Its presence and personality, intact from previous times, prepare you for a fact you might otherwise miss: that this quite contemporary house is deeply rooted in its own storied past.

Walking very early one morning in the hills around the house you see spread before you in the preceding pages, I was reminded how dependent the vaster beauties of Nature are upon the lesser beauties of man. Only he possesses beauty, I said to myself, who tries to create it. Nature reveals herself only to those whom discipline has rendered clairvoyant.

The night before, I had been reading Emerson's account of the creative process. This had led me to wondering how the architect manages to insinuate his creative ideas into the often-opaque minds of his clients. Emerson had said that creative promptings come from divine murmurings overheard by lucky mortals. Could this really be?

This thought, which had bemused me, was now due for demonstration. As I approached this house in the hills, the seams of whose recent remodeling I had seen only the day before, I became heir to a conversation in process between the Spirit of Beauty and the Guardian Spirit of this re-built house. I had often heard, but did not know until now, that every house is possessed—diabolically or divinely possessed. (Please turn to page 113)

PROGRESS WITH PERMANENCE

Taste the difference in water from a faucet with Spring-Flo

Crystal-clear, sweet-tasting water fills your glass from a faucet with Spring-Flo. It comes from the tap in a rushing stream, charged with millions of tiny air bubbles that break and vanish—taking odors, off-tastes and cloudiness with them! Spring-Flo water tastes and looks as pure water should!

You'll find Spring-Flo water better for washing, rinsing, too! The high-velocity bubbly stream mixes soaps thoroughly. Clings, spreads as it rinses, with never a splash. Make sure you get Spring-Flo on your new faucets!

The father's presence is clearly felt. Less clear, his wife's, it would seem. As Mr. T. V. Smith comments poetically on page 114, "her personality was submerged in that of her husband, as the wont was in those days."

"Clearly," Mr. Smith continues, "the present wife, mother of the four children, is not thus incorporated in her husband."

Both the husband and wife of the new generation wanted to preserve the house as much as possible and remodel it as little as necessary. They wanted to keep the sense of family continuity it gave them. They wanted to add a sense of progress and, perhaps, a greater sense of their own presence. They both participated wholeheartedly in the plans for remodeling and here the present mistress has made her own personality clearly felt, possibly unlike the former mistress.

The house was large. It had many rooms and so it could be made ideal for a lively family of six.

Besides its many rooms, the house had other advantages that made it worth remodeling:

A beautiful, stately old garden and charming valley view (discussed in more detail on page 78); an architectural character pleasantly at home on the site; a familiar and loved neighborhood.

We have already mentioned the fact of family associations and memories, which are intangibles that often outweigh any other consideration when you consider whether or not to remodel or move away and build from scratch.

A decision was reached to do only as much remodeling as necessary in order to preserve the spirit of the original structure while adapting it for more contemporary ways of living.

THE project began as a modest alteration of the service wing, particularly in the kitchen and breakfast areas, where new attitudes and equipment have made most people unsatisfied with old houses.

In the process of remodeling, it was discovered that the old structure was considerably weakened and much of it had to be replaced, at least in the service wing and central part of the house containing the dining and living rooms. (The two-story bedroom wing was practically untouched.)

One of the unknown factors in remodeling is always the condition of the structure. Sometimes it is found to be perfectly sound; other times it needs complete redoing. If the first, the cost of remodeling is, of course, considerably less than if otherwise. However, in the case of our Pace Setter, the question of cost was not primary, although it was important. It was the family home and the family wanted to keep it, while making it more livable—that was most important.

A better relationship between the outdoors and the indoors was established. Architecturally, this meant replacing the relatively small and heavy windows with greater expanses of glass, often in the form of sliding doors, easily opened to allow access to the new deck.

From within the house one can now enjoy the fine northerly and easterly views across a magnificent valley, as well as a closer view of the oaks and the lawn. The new deck, which extends from the breakfast room, past the dining and living rooms, and around the corner of the bedroom wing, now provides a place for outdoor pleasures right outside these rooms and on the same level with them—the point of building a deck, generally. It is easy to roll a serving cart from the kitchen to any part of the deck.

THE original house had no garage facilities nearby. In the remodeling, two separate carports were provided at right angles to each other at the service wing of the house. Under the circumstances, better arrangements could not be made. (A retaining wall made expanding the drive inadvisable.)

The two carports now allow for deliveries directly to the service wing and for parking at the new patio-entrance. One can get out of an automobile and walk to the house completely under-roof.

Formerly the living room took all the brunt of being both entrance hall and passage way between service and bedroom wings. The architect solved this by creating an entirely new room outside the original perimeter of the old house, between the living room and the patio—the lanai. Studying the plan on page 86, you see how the lanai now acts as foyer and corridor, relieving the living room of these unnecessary functions.

But more than that, the new lanai has made possible a whole new way of enjoying the outdoors. It has helped create an intimate garden wing out of this part of the house. One whole wall facing the patio court is of glass, giving it a sunny openness and informal air. (We tell the complete story of this extremely interesting room, including its provisions for home entertainment, on page 86.)

In connection with the lanai, a garden different in mood and purpose from the older, more traditional one was designed and laid out in the patio. It was virtually an extension of the lanai itself, with which it is intimately joined and from which it can be intimately enjoyed.

THE new living room is perhaps the best place for us to return to our theme of progress with permanence. There are pictures of it throughout the issue which graphically describe its thoroughly contemporary feeling: the high soaring ceilings, the sense of spaciousness and free-and-easy contact with life outside, the airy sheltered view of the trees and the valley.

At the same time, it is in the living room where the old and new combine most fruitfully. To begin with, it was literally designed around the inherited possessions of the family: their works of art and literature. As a matter of fact, one of the requirements asked of the remodeling architect was to provide a background for them.

One entire end of the room is made up of book shelves and drawers. The book shelves were divided into sections so that between them four rows of beautiful, 16th-century Limoges plaques might be prominently displayed. The shelves contain a particularly fine collection of rare and handsome volumes. Beneath them are drawers full of etchings and prints carefully chosen by the owner's father over the years. On the walls of the house many of them are framed and hung.

a breakfast-room-kitchen, maid's room and bath. The laundry and food storage areas are located beneath. Two dumb-waiters make it easy to send things up or down. A sink is available for pantry uses or flower arranging.

The kitchen, about which we write more extensively on page 93, bears no resemblance to its predecessor. Here all is progress—and well it should be, for the old kitchen needed it. Of all parts of an old house, the kitchen is most in need of such updating.

The bedroom wing underwent the least remodeling, in a structural sense. However, it shows how much can be achieved by simply re-furnishing and redecorating. This aspect of the Pace Setter is best commented on elsewhere in the issue, particularly in the stories on the master bedroom and the children's rooms. Here, we are simply summarizing.

The master bedroom has walls finished in soft rose-colored silk wallpaper. Thanks to ventilation provided by solid wood shutters, one can draw the curtains across the big glass windows for morning darkness and still get sufficient air.

Adjacent to the master bedroom is the master's dressing room, which also serves as a study (see page 73). Perhaps the most interesting feature here is a revolving trouser-and-shoe rack in the corner on which 24 pairs of trousers can be hung and with space for more than 20 pairs of shoes. Rotating, the rack brings everything into sight and reach. The closet takes up otherwise dead corner space. A dressing area for the lady of the house has compartmented closets with sliding, louvered doors that automatically turn the lights on or off as they are opened or closed.

The rest of the two-story part of the house was altered only slightly with new wallpaper and grass cloth, some new plumbing fixtures and a new window or two. In this sense, all remodeling was designed to change only what was best changed, not simply to change everything for novelty's sake.

THE result was to create an all-satisfying house: Satisfying the family's desire for improving and increasing the means of a richer family life and the equally important desire of preserving a continuity with the past.

Certainly the Pace Setter of 1956 shows that remodeling in this spirit is often the best way of achieving the finest in living, of having progress and permanence, too.

THE LOVELY OLD GROUNDS

The beautiful, somewhat traditional garden of the old house has remained relatively unchanged. What has changed in the remodeling has been the ease of going out into it, by means of the deck, and the greater openness of the house to the graceful views, by means of walls of protected glass.

The smaller but equally successful garden at the entrance has given that part of the house a contemporary look and feeling. The lanai, a completely new room, seems part of the patio-garden and vice versa.

Landscape architect Kathryn Stedman has employed all the principles of the best modern design to create a charming and useful garden at this important point of the house. The old house never had an entrance that acknowledged the fact that people, these days, arrive by automobile.

Now there is a way of descending from an automobile and proceeding under cover to the entrance. Low, terrace-wide steps broaden the look of the entrance garden and smoothly join it to the lower-level driveway.

Structurally, the new garden blends with the remodeled old house. The stone plant box at the beginning of the covered walk leading into the lanai separates it from the drive and also makes the whole court part of the architecture.

The planting was planned for low maintenance and for year around attractiveness. The plant boxes of redwood, for instance, were specially designed for their positions, where they accent the posts supporting the overhang, further tying the house and patio-garden together.

The dwarf lemons in these plant boxes seasonally lend their sunshine to the house and reflect the yellow-to-orange reds of the incidental colors of the interior.

An evergreen elm tree was moved in to help merge the second story of the old wing with the lower remodeled wing of the house and also to merge the new garden with the trees of the old. In addition, the elm offers the lanai light summer shade and permits winter sun.

Many measures were taken to link the new elements of the house with the old ones, and with the surrounding gardens. For instance, where new paving was added on the side facing the old garden, it was done with flagstones laid in sand, the joints planted with moss. New planting throughout was keyed to correspond in color and texture with the old plantings; a transition was made between deck and garden with appropriate shrubs and plants.

Fortunately the garden was in practically perfect condition, unlike the old house, whose structure was found to be quite weakened. Consequently little was done to the garden itself.

In remodeling a garden, unlike remodeling a house, there are not likely to be unknown difficulties facing you that might easily run to heavy, unexpected expenses. And, although the landscape architect did not need to do much to the original garden of the Pace better, here for your information is the detailed procedure for remodeling a garden, if such is your need:

You start with the trees—their age, health and species. You must expect to fuss expensively with patchy old trees that have lost their eagerness to live: trees in their prime respond like teenagers to food. Trees beaten by winds or split by lightning may be rotten inside. Probe a little to determine the extent of this and to get an idea of what it will cost to scrape out, way down to the live wood.

Some species of trees aren't worth investing your money. The landscape architect or the local Davey or Bartlett tree expert can advise wisely on this. They are also the people to determine what to do with cables and bolts, when branches seem to reach beyond safe limits and angles.

Next the shrubs get a close going over. Age doesn't matter in shrubs. Healthy roots shoot out new sprouts, if but stirred into action by a rich diet and untamed whacking back of old tops. But health here is as important as in trees. The troubles are different, though. Instead of for half-con-

Instead of putting plants under the wide overhang that shades lanai, landscape architect Stodman paved the area handsomely with these 2-inch, black ceramic tiles and assembled a flower show of potted plants put out where they can look full at the sun and the rain.

So much beauty in such modest space . . . and at such modest cost! This sumptuous "second bathroom" measures only 5' x 9', yet its ingenious design, rich appointments and many conveniences make it seem much larger. In Stylon Ceramic Tile, this happy blend of beauty and function will add glory to your home for a lifetime.

For everlasting good looks, Alfred Browning Parker, architect, and Carmen Graham, color stylist-designer, have chosen new Stylon Glazettes in a specially created "Waves" pattern.

Whether you're buying, building or remodeling, a Stylon-tiled room can be yours at reasonable initial cost, and not a cent for upkeep! For Stylon Ceramic Tile retains its glistening glamour for a lifetime, despite steam, water, sun, flame and every kind of rugged use.

Make out-of-doors leisure a real pleasure with thrifty, wearproof steel

Today's improved steels are adding a new dimension in grace and ease and solid comfort to American living. Yes, outdoors as well as in!

Just look at steel's handiwork in this pleasing patio. The smart garden furniture, the handy serving cart, the built-in barbecue center, the framework for the distinctive sheltering canopy—all are made of durable, warp-proof, rust-free steel!

And these are just a few of the many practical, economical items of steel designed to add a gay, casual note to relaxing out-of-doors.

Steel costs so little, yet lasts so long, that it's one of the thriftiest possible investments. So, whether you're creating or renovating an outdoor area, make sure that steel figures strongly in your plans. Remember: Steel is the foundation of modern living.

Accent on smartness that's down to earth! Steel—enduring, economical steel—is the star in this de luxe transformation of the barren backyard you see below into the inviting patio above. Its well known designer: Marvin Culbreth.

aled rot, the hunt goes after tangled, whiskery growth where sap-filled stems should be, for any leaves scarcely able to keep their own sugars, let alone make ore for pumping to the roots, wewers and growing shoots, and for ti-social suckers that shoot sky- rd all out of proportion to the disciplined habits of the rest of e bush.

Always the watch is for what se pruning could do for each rub. Could this one be converted m a many-system bush to a lone- m junior tree? Old lilacs and neysuckles pushing past the win- ws of the second story often offer other choice. Or is this a shrub at would star, if but afforded tter background—or a new spot the stage?

Many slow growers, like box- od or holly, are still in the minor ey were less significant shrubs. ke most shrubs, moving them is surdly simple at the time of neral garden remodeling. Spe- lists and their special gear are ht on the scene. Even moving g trees is no problem, since there e no complicating over-head res or traffic, as there would be, the plants were brought along e public highway from some er garden.

Soil must be scrutinized, not so uch for such easy correctives as ability to feed plants, but to ow what happens when the rains me, when summer drought dries the countryside, when holes ust be dug for planting. Must the es shower down their leaves en rains are scarce, the lawn n brown by midsummer? Will dles remain for hours after ch rain? Will new spring growth me reluctantly and weeks late ch year, because soggy soil is e a cake without eggs?

Depending upon the part of the ntry—though more parts are ore suspect each year—there ust be a tight screening for nema- les. These elusive little eel rms stay in the soil, waiting to ack the roots. Sometimes they row into them (watch for little nps on the roots). Sometimes ey only sidle up to their victims, mp the live sap into their own llies (plants fed and watered erally still languish for no known ason). Either way, the plants are bad condition.

Since the soil is infected and the pest too tiny for man to see them in the soil, wormy soil involves an over-all chemical treatment, which happens to be expensive. Until this year the treatment also killed most kinds of plants, which made the discovery of nematodes rule out many a proposed garden remodel- ing. Now VC-13 and Shell's Nema- gon wipe out nematodes without injury to even the lawn grass.

Present grades shouldn't deter- mine what might be done, but they do limit what can be done without danger to existing trees. Tamper- ing with grades also upsets present drainage patterns, and it may inter- mix good and bad soils. But con- sider whether or not the grades might be left alone, as at the Pace Setter, and a deck built to perform as an outdoor terrace.

Would minor grade changes seem to alter the contours enough to make them more pleasant? Possi- bly new paths or planting might create long lovely lines where now lines seem short and choppy, be- cause they cross the slope.

Any inventory must include a look into the future. There will be views to exploit—and to hide. Views might exist, needing only pruning to reveal them, but others will have to be created from nothing but the alert imagination.

Costly remodeling problems:

- 1. Rot in trees: This calls for much tedious work by a tree expert at about $5 an hour. It may take weeks to clean out a big tree. Properly done, the work prolongs the life of a doomed tree for a quarter of a century.
- 2. Poor drainage: Ripping open the ground to install a network of tile drains is costly enough, but what are you going to do with the collected water? Remember, too, that if you are beyond the sewer lines, adding a new dishwasher, automatic laundry or garbage dis- posal unit dumps much more water into the soil, makes necessary a new drainage field for your septic tank.
- 3. Nematode-infested soil: At last we have—new this year—chemicals that kill these almost invisible little worms without damage to the plants struggling to keep alive in the in- fested soil. But treating every square inch of soil, which you must do because nematodes outrace even rabbits as prolific breeders, involves you in a major project.

4. New family needs, say for a swimming pool, garden house or tennis court, may involve not just the cost of construction, but the dollars spent to tear down and clear away unwanted things—trees, hidden boulders, old pavements.

5. Steep slopes that demand re- taining walls or decks before they provide outdoor living space for you: Retaining walls set you back roughly $1.50 a square foot of ex- posed surface. Decks dent the bud- get about $5 for each square foot covered, but of course they result in usable living space, whereas the retaining wall provides only the license to go ahead and create something useful from the flat space made possible by the wall.

6. No easy access from garden to house: Cutting new doors may cost $100 or $1,000, depending on what has to be done to strengthen the wall so that the new door-openings don't bring everything down in a great heap.

Problems fairly easy to solve:

- 1. Excessive shade: May seem to make nothing grow. Actually hun- dreds of fine plants must have shade. Shade problems usually turn out to be the wrong choice of plants, starved soil or failure to irrigate during droughts. Starvation and thirst are severe, because shade trees grab off both food and water first, thanks to their deeper, more widely roaming roots. Raise the canopy of shade each year by saw- ing off the lower branches, thus more sunlight and rainfall will reach the plants below.
- 2. Plants overgrown: No matter what the jungle-tangle, plants come back quickly after a ruthless pruning that clears away the in- tertwining. Many oversize shrubs can be sculpted into a fine, single- stem tree of surprising distinction. Others can be dewhiskered of all the sickly little shoots at the base, so that the plant becomes a clean mass of rugged stems supporting a generous head.
- 3. Too little parking space: This is most common where antique zon- ing czars relegated one-third the taxed land to a useless front yard—and nowhere is the solution easier or cheaper. Put a privacy screen near the house, convert the street- side land into guest parking, leav- ing existing trees to roof this mod- ern auto-age porte cochère.
- 4. No privacy: Often baffling to solve, but actually takes more (Please turn the page)

...because they went to their doctors in time

Many thousands of Americans are being cured of cancer every year. More and more people are going to their doctors in time. That is encouraging!

But the tragic fact, our doctors tell us, is that every third cancer death is a needless death...twice as many could be saved.

To learn how to head off cancer, call the American Cancer Society office nearest you or simply write to "Cancer" in care of your local Post Office.

thoughtful planning than large sums of money.

5. Upkeep excessive: Upkeep is what you make it. Fussy design demanding hand work, succumbing to the myth of "flowers all season," failure to buy available power tools, and unrealistic demands for jewel-box perfection could break even the treasury. "Flower-show perfect" costs four times as much as "passable," in the experience of harried experts like Boston's Homer Dodge, who provides clients with both extremes and all nuances between.

6. Poor soil: This is a handy excuse for poor gardening habits, but rarely more than a shaky prop. Usually all that is lacking is plant food. Sometimes the soil has been abused—pounded down until it could win in a weight-holding competition with concrete. But properly loosened, stuffed with peat and plant food, even despised yellow-clay subsoil can outbloom inky loams the way most people garden.

7. Old views lost: The previous owner may find it hard to accept the change, but smart remodeling can build in better views, some within the garden, others to the outside world as well. Remember, you "own" as far as the eye can see. Trees and sky, streets away, are yours to include without cost, as you remodel the garden.

Ten ways to cut upkeep costs:

- 1. Convert to a shade garden, mainly trees, with big old shrubs pruned into tree form. Because the trees are big, soaring way over head, the mind is happy with a few plants. For example, the magnificent gardens of The South, as we see them today, really are only the remnants of gardens once stuffed with shrubs and flowers.
- 2. Confine flowers to a small, sunny area and concentrate on mass displays of a kind to provide such color that it makes the whole garden come alive. Forget the fussy perennial border (what the old-time hired gardener called the mixed border or English garden). Specialize in only one or two perennials—maybe iris, daylily, rose or chrysanthemum. Become a lily connoisseur, daffodil specialist or an expert on some favorite annual.
- 3. Streamline all design shapes for fast power lawn-mowing. It's not the amount of lawn to mow, but how much you have to fuss with little patches of it. Grass can be the cheapest way to keep grounds looking attractive—or most expensive.

4. Install mowing edges along the lawn so that hand trimming is banished forever.

5. Pave or fill with groundcovers those areas where grass isn't happy. But don't assume that either costs nothing to keep neat. Paving must be swept often, washed occasionally. Groundcovers trap leaves and old papers the way little boys' pockets collect junk, and they are just about as troublesome to get cleaned out.

6. Prune the big shade trees to keep branches high enough in the air so that plants at ground level get more light and air. This encourages flowers and shrubs to grow with vim, and makes life difficult for bugs and blights.

7. Keep pools away from falling tree leaves, also buffered from grass clippings and wind-blown garden mulches by a strip of paving. Swimming pools require daily vacuum cleaning, if you ignore this.

8. Pave paths, steps and parking. Grass paths and steps seem like wonderful dollar-stretchers, but cost far too much in upkeep. Gravel or bluestone driveways look handsome, cost little to install, but they soon seem messy, unless raked and rolled often and lovingly. Add in the cost, too, of nicked lawnmower blades that find driveway stones hidden in the grass.

9. Prune the hedges once a year, just before the vigorous spurt of new shoots in the spring, instead of clipping them every week. The soft, natural look that comes as a by-product of this big labor-saver takes away the man-made precision that feeds the ego of a hired gardener, but the soft look also makes less tragic the loss of a shoot or even a plant by pest or accident.

10. Feed liberally and irrigate during droughts. Healthy plants shrug off diseases and are bypassed by hungry bugs until all else has been eaten. The secret of the fabled green thumb of oldtime gardeners could be found in the care with which they fed and watered their plants.

Where to splurge:

1. Tree pruning: Hire an artist among tree experts. He will create living sculpture from even nondescript trees.

2. Plant food: The plants probably have been half-starved for years, so will jump when fed. Puny leaves will give way to broad, shiny creations and the look of pleased pets.

3. Moving plants: Don't put up with the inconvenience of plants out of place, shade that falls just a little to one side of where it would please you most, or plants that jostle each other for a look at the sun. Trees up to 10 inches in diameter offer no problem to a trained tree-mover. The trees will go growing in the new spot, as if never disturbed.

4. Paving: Get the best. Paving needs a good foundation as much as a mattress needs good bedspring. A poor mix of concrete makes a surface that cracks or flakes off. Too cheap blacktop is a sticky go in summer, glass-brittle in winter.

5. Reshaping the lawn: Streamline to make power mowing easy, eliminate the sharp corners, also the quick changes in elevation that make the mower slash off the humph.

6. Mowing edges: These look like luxuries installed for style, but they often cut the lawn-mowing bill in half and trimming by hand is the real luxury.

7. One gorgeous bed of flowers: This keeps the garden colorful, but practical. Elevate the bed for even more show for your work. The extra cost of building the raised plan bed will come back in hours saved in caring for the flowers without any stooping.

Order of work before house remodeling:

1. Protect the trees from damage by builder's machinery. Erect rugged barricades.

2. Tie dangling branches of shrubs to keep them safe; transplant shrubs into a temporary home until you are ready to place them permanently.

3. Keep truck traffic and worker cars off the property—at all times.

4. Prune the trees to remove branches that obviously must go—during remodeling:

5. Install drainage lines in the soil.

6. Build necessary pools, garden house, steps, etc.

7. Treat the soil chemically to kill nematodes.

8. Mix peat and plant food into the soil.

9. Pave terrace, paths and parking—after remodeling:

10. Complete planting.

11. Complete pruning.

12. Complete tree pruning, opening up desired views and creating living sculpture from your trees.

13. Build privacy screens, using plants or fencing.

14. Seed the lawn.

A PHILOSOPHER LOOKS AT THIS PACE SETTER HOUSE

The long driveway, with its beautiful, established plantings, partially explains why the owners chose to remodel.

The first voice of that conversation was of the local spirit, saying:

"If you knew as much as old houses do.

"Your dreams would be troubled and broken too."

But the Spirit of Beauty was pressing a query in the invidious spirit of mortals: "But are you 'functional' or 'organic'?"

"We of this house," the local spirit answered with dignity. "do not separate 'use' and 'beauty'."

"Why, then, did you allow the house over which you preside to be rebuilt?"

"Because the two had been separated and require to be brought together again," the house spirit answered. "But you mistake the nature of my vocation in the very form of your question. I am not cause but only caretaker of this house, as of the house which preceded it. I can at most only reflect achievement or, at the very most, prompt it. I cannot cause anything. This impotence is the penalty of being immaterial. Do you, Spirit of Beauty, find it otherwise?"

"No," said the Universal Spirit pensively. "such is the relation of all us children of spirit to the stuff of Nature. We must honor the priority of the material and must await its impulses to take on form, to become this or that thing. Are there other local deities hereabout, guardians of the children, for instance, whose remnants of play I see upon the lawn?"

"Yes, there are four guardian angels, one for each child, and then a spirit for the grandfather, who built the place originally."

"And a spirit for the grandmother, as well?"

"No, no spirit for her; her personality was submerged in that of her husband, as the wont was in those days."

"Clearly the present wife, mother of the four children, is not thus incorporated in her husband. So there must be two more guardian angels, one for her and one for her husband, the present owner?"

"Yes, two more, but more like twins than separate. It is a new day, you know, and a new wont—and so this new house to mark the migration of beauty. The husband and wife may tilt over the removal of the evergreen there by the swimming pool, whereupon their spirits are easily discernible in our ethereal kingdom. But you could be easily led astray by pursuing too far the notion of their separable identities. They grew together as children on this very spot, and in the shade of the old house now only partially discernible. Childhood sweethearts they were, and empathetic adjuncts each of the other. They thus achieved a unity of romance much closer than any unity arrived at by marriage."

"And this same unity obtains between the children and their parents?"

"Yes, in large part."

"And are the several deities of these hills united into a community?"

"YOU know, O Spirit of Beauty—though you seem to forget it—how spirits do but follow in the train of those whose distillates they are. We are the aroma not the agents of the world. We spirits are but capable of certain 'promptings' as you have said. We become a community only as men get socialized."

"All this I know; but since you play down our power, I am playing up our influence. We are capable of certain 'promptings'; and I dare say that without you this house would not have been re-built."

"Yes, all tutelary deities conspired to bring about the rebuilding of this house, that the past and the future might speak to each other and time might issue a seamless whole. Old houses carry on old quarrels and cast dark shadows of old blindnesses before them. We guardian spirits of this house and these people did play upon the sub-consciousness of the present master and mistress until their dreams were disturbed and their vital energies began to incline to discontentment with the old, dreaming of something new, then planning, and at last perpetration."

"And have your promptings been as successful within, so to say, as this outward show of unity between the hills and the house, between the natural and the man-made elements of the place?"

"YES as you may judge for yourself. Last year, the remodeling done, master and mistress went abroad for a long delayed Grand Tour. Arrangements were made, children and all, for a successful tour. Before half the trip was over, they cancelled arrangements and hastened home, not for the children, as you may guess, but for nostalgia over the harmony of these lovely scenes. I heard the mistress tell the master this very morning, looking in the closet where their luggage is stored: 'It is beautiful, our new luggage, but we'll probably not use it again. To tell the truth, I like it better in the closet of this house than on any foreign dock.' They have become to themselves the vital links between those who went before and those who come after; and this house is the linkage across the gulf of flowing time. Its image in their hearts has eased their feet of wanderlust and freed their minds from fugitive desires. As Kipling has written:

"God gave all men all earth to love,

But since our hearts are small,
Ordained for each one spot should prove Beloved over all.

"That as He watched creation's birth

So we in God-like mood,
May of our love create our earth,
And see that it is good."

"YOU have, O Guardian of this House, you have answered my questions completely and have satisfied me fully. I feel deeply what you have said. It marks the rise in this spot of what the philosophers call 'institutional beauty.' This is the kind which abides and which permanently enriches our world. Who gives form to the void is creator of beauty; but when the void is the plastics of human germ plasm and the form imposed upon it is reverence for life, with piety for its processes, there we find a warp and woof tough enough to withstand the ebb of time and precious enough to yield tribes from families, nations from tribes, and humanity from nationhood. In such cultural forms, and only in them, am I, Spirit of Beauty, wholly fulfilled. A house, and especially a re-modeled house,

. . . knows much that it doesn't tell—

It keeps its secrets closely and well.

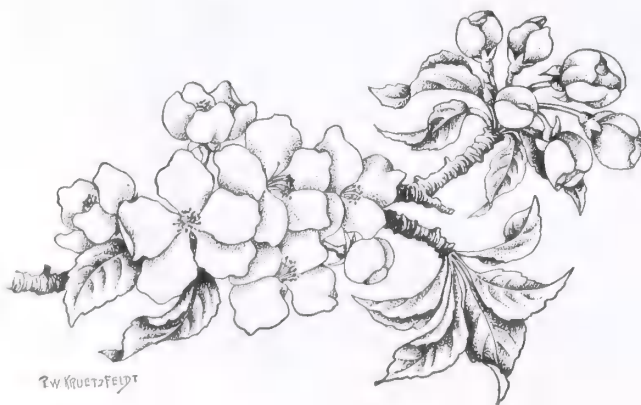

It guards securely, with lock and bar,

The inner place where its treasures are,

I'm sure a house has a thousand ears,

But it never speaks of the things it hears."

"And, O Spirit of Beauty, let you and me keep what this house keeps—let us keep even its identity; and let us tell of it only what this house itself would tell!"

W. KRUEZ-FELDT

water. He died at the early age of fifty-three. Immediately the rumors began flying that he had drunk the glass of water on purpose, that in fact he had committed suicide. Nor was this rumor been stilled to this very day, although no sufficient evidence exists to give it substance.

At any rate, the Pathétique was his legacy, one to be cherished, and nothing could have better expressed the spirit of the time, the mood of its audiences. All over the world it was welcomed. Even in Boston, Richard Hale, the program annotator for the Boston Symphony, reported that "the Pathétique was at first so popular that many predicted its life would be short."

But its life has proved to be far from short. The Pathétique has been just as popular in an age of very different mood and artistic deals, in an age when romanticism had become not a feeling for the present, but a recollection of the past with the new romantic revival.

HERE is the nub. Here you find the explanation of why a work which served as a perfect expression of its time remains popular in a period when it is no longer timely. By understanding this you begin to define the timelessness of a work of art. We are speaking of immortality. Where does immortality lie? Quite obviously in quality, in worth, in strength, in vitality. Launched on the stream of time, the symphony now lives on independent of the stream. For in its own way, the Pathétique is great music.

Though for once a symphony is well named and the title applicable, it would be a great mistake to see in the music merely a flood of tears, a musical crying jag. Quite true, its first movement is somber and its final movement ends in a sense of deep oppression. But there are high and lofty moments. There is exaltation and musical beauty.

Comparing the Pathétique to Beethoven's or Brahms' symphonies (a foolish thing to do) we can well be dissatisfied with its lack of restraint, with the nervous short phrases which run up and down the strings, with the squeezing of the last drop of emotion out of the somber hues of the orchestral colors. But taking it at its own self, we can thoroughly agree with the popular verdict. The symphony is unique. It is a legacy to be cherished. It is beautiful.

Certain it is that we find in the first movement one of the most appealing melodies in orchestral music. This is the broad melody of the second theme, a soaring and sensuous melody, lifted high by the strings, until it finally sinks into the soft, lower reaches of the bassoon (in actual performance, it is often played by a bass clarinet, as the bassoon is unable to play that softly). After this, the Development section begins with a great explosive shock, using the dramatic first subject.

The second movement is a charming and graceful one, waltzlike, though the time measure is five to the bar and not three-quarter time.

Then follows the thrice-famous March. It is wild, barbaric, maintaining a mounting tension all through the movement with the use of one melody only.

To the Finale, which is marked "adagio lamentoso," really belongs the title "Pathétique."

There are people who despise this symphony. I really feel sorry for them.

FOR YOUR ART LIBRARY

Some strikingly beautiful books are now coming into the United States from Japan. Some of those we've seen and liked are as high as $16 a volume (and worth it); many more are as inexpensive as $1 (and worth more).

The former are in a series of six volumes called Pageant of Japanese Art, edited by staff members of the Tokyo National Museum. Volume VI of the series is on Japanese architecture and gardens, and we've never seen a finer collection of illustrations on the two subjects.

The $1 volumes are pocket-size books of prints and explanatory texts describing such superb artists as Hokusai, Sharaku and Hiroshige. Most of them are in English. They all will be shortly. All are imported by Charles E. Tuttle of Rutland, Vermont, from whom catalogs are available.—J.A.B.

The man who named Tombstone, Arizona

THE SURPRISED government scout from Camp Huachuca reined his horse to a stop at the sight of Ed Schieffelin. And when Schieffelin admitted he was actually living and prospecting in Apache country, the scout warned him, "All you'll ever find'll be your tombstone."

But Schieffelin didn't scare easy. When he struck a silver lode in the desolate, dangerous hills of Arizona Territory, he called his first mine "Tombstone." And, unknowingly, he gave a name to a borning, brawling community soon to be notorious as one of frontier America's tough towns.

The Tombstone mine itself never amounted to anything. But Schieffelin just kept on prospecting—and within a few years, he turned out to be a millionaire. The hills he had risked his life in were practically made of silver.

Today's Ed Schieffelins are hunting uranium ore with Geiger counters, but their spirit is the same. And it is only part of the spirit of 165 million Americans who stand behind U. S. Series E Savings Bonds—who, by being the people they are, make these Bonds one of the finest investments in the world.

And, for an American, the very finest investment. Why not help your country—and, very importantly, yourself, by buying Bonds regularly? And hold on to them!

It's actually easy to save money—when you buy Series E Savings Bonds through the automatic Payroll Savings Plan where you work! You just sign an application at your pay office; after that your saving is done for you. The Bonds you receive will pay you interest at the rate of 3% per year, compounded semi-annually, when held to maturity. And after maturity they go on earning 10 years more. Join the Plan today. Or invest in Bonds regularly where you bank.

Looking from the lanai into the living room at night, one notes the translucent quality of the loosely woven screens that slide back and forth between both rooms.

this new kind of garden room.

The high-fidelity system has a record changer for continuous playing of dance music and a turntable for more serious listening. It serves both the lanai and the living and dining rooms.

The lanai has other entertainment aspects: It is used for the showing of slides or home movies. In one corner of the new room, to the left as one enters from the patio, is a small, cleverly concealed bar, fitted with clear, Lucite shelves and backed with a mirror. When not in use, the bar can be closed off by means of triple-hinged doors and the lanai shows no signs of its presence—which is all to the good, certainly.

As for other functions of the multi-purpose lanai: It now acts as an entrance hall between the front door and the living room. It provides a passageway between the service areas and the bedroom wing, where previously all such traffic had been through the living room, which had also acted as the entrance hall before remodeling.

It is a second living room, a sort of enclosed garden room, which can be shut off by means of shoji-like panels from the rest of the house or left open to it. Through its wall of protected glass comes the green beauty of the patio-garden, a close-up intimacy with nature that no other room has.

Indeed, so successful has the lanai proved, in all its functions, that the family—parents and four young children—rarely go outside the Pace Setter for their fun. They have it right at home.

When you also consider the wealth of reading in the living room, the abundance of enjoyment possible on the great deck, the variety of games to be played in the upstairs playroom or the outdoor playground, you begin to understand why they feel as they do, why they have come to the fullest realization of the fact that home is the center of everything.

You'd have to be an engineer to know which TV set to buy

The most complicated piece of equipment in the American home is a television set.

Yet you're not afraid to go out and buy one without even "looking under the hood."

What makes you so sure of yourself? In fact—how can you buy so many things you know so little about, without worrying?

Isn't it because you've learned the secret of safe and sound buying?

A good brand is your best guarantee

No matter what kind of a product you're buying, you know you're right when you buy a good brand. You know the manufacturer will stand behind it because his reputation is at stake. You can depend on a good brand.

The more good brands you know, the fewer buying mistakes you'll make. Get acquainted with the good brands in these pages and get more value for your shopping money.

particularly entrancing about the things that are happening to American vacation patterns. We are seeing the dissolution of the sacred "seasons," when it was smart to be seen only then in certain places. We go off happily at any time of year to any place that suits us. And mind that word "go," for whether we ultimately deposit ourselves on a Florida beach or on a Wyoming dude ranch, the characteristic of the new vacation is that we cover considerable distance.

There's a wonderful new urgency in us to see more places, know more people, really re-create ourselves in new surroundings. Fortuitously, we can literally go almost anywhere in the world. (SVEA Swedish steamship lines are even shepherding six nine-day escorted tours to Russia this summer, according to their New York agents, Linjebuss International.) Moreover, it seems as if there's hardly anything we've "always wanted to do" that we can't do now, from harpooning whales in Norway to learning Spanish in Madrid. And we can do most of these things with a minimum of traveling effort, in surprisingly little time, at surprisingly little cost. Imagine being able to charge a vacation and save money by taking the whole family along!

Here, for instance, for the benefit of last-minute planners, is an inkling of some of the diverse ways you may still spend a vacation this summer:

Bermuda. For $99 round trip plus tax, you might make the three-hour direct flight to Bermuda from New York via British Overseas Airways, Colonial or Pan American. Temperature charts indicate that Bermuda's heat hovers around 84° during the summer months, but they don't explain that perpetual trade winds can be depended upon to blow up and cool you off. Our standard "must-do" in any season of the year is the ferry trip (carrying your bike, of course, and a box lunch from your guest house or hotel) from Hamilton to Somerset, and a breezy bicycling along the south shore for a picnic and swimming in the secluded, rocky cove of Great Whale Bay. Motor bikes? Oh, sure, if you must!

Montana's great outdoors, as part of that trip west which every American family has on the docket, couldn't be more congenially encountered than through a stay at Swanson's Mountain View Lodge in Troy, Montana. It's 150 miles from Spokane, Washington, easily accessible from that city by car, rented or your own, and one of those places that people stop off at, and then decide to remain the rest of the summer.

Riding, swimming, fishing and courses in such crafts as painting, sculpture, ceramics, are all casual facets of life on a ranch that's been built on the good old Scandinavian basis of excellent food and perfectly maintained surroundings.

It is run under the personal, intimate supervision of a family of world travelers, the Swansons. And according to visitors who have experienced their hospitality, the Swansons are about 90 per cent responsible for the charm of the place; mind you, they're competing with some rather impressive Rocky Mountains and a paintable neighborhood of lakes and streams and cedar forests.

Rooms in the rustic lodge reflect the family's universal interests, outfitted as they are in designs reminiscent of Hawaii, Mexico, Paris, Bavaria, Sweden and American Indian country.

Alaska, besides being the land of glaciers, gold fields, and the violent ways of Soapy Smith, is in summer a sort of enchanted country of birch groves and poppy fields, where flowers grow big as soup plates and the air is as clear as mountain streams. This year you might visit it under the auspices of Pan American World Airways and Wien-Alaska Airlines, on a 13-day, all-inclusive vacation that takes you to scenes of the gold rush, Tanana River, McKinley National Park and the Portage Glacier. Two more days and you can cross the Arctic Circle to the Eskimos' age-old country, stopping over at Point Barrow at the Top-O-The-World Hotel.

The Alaskan trip starts from Seattle and makes a romantic finale to any trip to the American northwest.

Or, if you'd like to make a more leisurely trip to Alaska, cruising the Canadian coast from Vancouver and Victoria up to Skagway or Sitka, you should know that steamships of the Canadian Pacific, Canadian National and Union Steamship lines make this run during the summer. Reservations are usually filled early, so act fast.

Delta Air Lines "Millionaire Dream Vacations" are summertime all-expense junkets to Miami, Nassau, Havana and the West Indian Islands at prices the Poor Working Girl can easily afford, and with features to turn the P. W. G.'s boss green with envy. Reason: Off-season rates prevail, so hotels are the best, accommodations are choice, conditions are pleasantly uncrowded everywhere. Typical costs, plus air fare, for meals, sightseeing and a shared double room are: seven days in Miami, $40.50; four nights in Haiti, $45; four days in Havana, $32.50.

A farm vacation, a nostalgic back-to-the-soil holiday, is not just an idle dream. Perhaps you've got a yen to board with a farm family and chew a little hayseed for a couple of weeks. Or you have a youngster who'd profit by some first-hand experience with the land and the people who work it. You can choose exactly the kind of farm that's for you, from the pages of a booklet that lists available farm accommodations in 22 states all under the supervision of an organization that insists upon high standards of housing equipment, food and sanitation. Costs are about $34 a week for adults, $13 to $25 a week for children. Current edition (1956) of the booklet gives complete descriptions of farms, locations and facilities and is yours for 25¢ sent to Farm Vacations and Holidays, Inc., 500 Fifth Avenue, New York 36, N.Y.

American Express Domestic Tours for those who like to slough off completely all the bother of figuring out time schedules and making hotel reservations, can take you painlessly on a whole variety of trips through the National Parks, California, the Canadian Rockies, most of them carefully planned for the people with one- and two-week vacations. Some are as short as a week end or as long as 25 days.

The New Hampshire Craftsman Fair, something of a nationally known festival after 22 years, this year pulling many a home-conscious traveler to the Belknap Recreation area at Gilford, N. H. where it will be held from July 3 through August 4. It's an ambitious, annual display of the work of the state's weavers, ceramists, woodworkers, rug makers and similar craftsmen, with special cocentration on home furnishings applications of these crafts. Part of the show is a constant series of demonstrations by the craftsmen themselves, with out-of-state crafts experts invited as speakers and demonstrators. For more information: The League of New Hampshire Arts and Crafts, 205 North Main Street, Concord, N. H.

San Diego County, considered by some the golden heart of the Golden State, offers summer-time vacationers a score of diversissements, including a 33-day festival, from July 18 through August 19, which is called Fiesta del Pacifico.

The whole Spanish-flavored history of California will be presented in a musical spectacular called, "California Story." And until September 15 all fishermen have a chance to compete in the 10th annual running of its famous Yellow-tail Fish Derby—enough to bring Isaak Waltons in from all over the country to try for the $25,000 worth of prizes.

The San Diego Convention and Tourist Bureau, 924 Second Ave., San Diego, California, can furnish all the details and help you plan a visit.

A Canadian arts and crafts vacation is an engaging thought. And if you're afraid this might put you into the dirndl and long-hair set, you just haven't caught on to the numbers of delightful duds and good natured do-it-yourselfers who are finding out how much fun it is to master a craft like weaving or ceramics, or to learn the proper approach to painting, singing and the ballet.

The New Brunswick School of Arts and Crafts at Alma, New Brunswick, offers all sorts of instruction in crafts like woodworking, furniture-making, upholstering, jewelry-making, rug-weaving and enameling, to visitors who may be spending a few days or a few weeks in Fundy National Park, a locale combining sea and woods.

Accommodation costs here run the gamut from camping out at $1 a week for a camp site to typical hotel rates for rooms in near-by hotels or rooming houses. The idea is that you learn by participating in projects. Depending on how much time you have, you may toss off a lampshade or make and upholster a love seat! School's in session from July 9 to August 24. For more on this fascinating subject, directions and available facilities, write to Director, New Brunswick School of Arts and Crafts, Alma, New Brunswick.

Sainte Adèle in Quebec, northwest of Montreal in the pastoral Laurentians, boasts the delightful Centre d'Art, under the equally delightful direction of Mlle. Pauline Rochon. She sees to it that guests enjoy the best of French-Canadian hospitality and the usual summer-time pleasures of the mountains, while they're perfecting their French, their painting, their dancing and singing under the tutelage of certificated instructors. Mademoiselle has also arranged for the young ones to be given supervision and instruction while their earnest elders improve themselves. Write for more information.

Learn Spanish in Spain

Summer in Spain is not just a vivid matter of flamenco dancing, manzanilla and the burgeoning clovalita, as the Spaniards call the carnation, their national flower. This year it can also be a golden opportunity for those with the urge to study the fascinating history and culture of Spain, without which it is almost impossible for an outlander to grasp the philosophy behind the language.

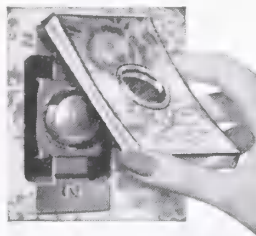

More than a dozen of Spain's venerable and excellent universities are offering programs this year especially geared for helping the North American understand the meaning of Spain, as well as its deceptively simple-looking language.

During July and August, Universities of Barcelona, Burgos, Cadiz, Madrid, Santander, Santiago de Compostela, Segovia, Seville, Valladolid and Zaragoza are giving such courses. All of them are low-cost, some of them offering weekly excursions to museums and the most interesting and beautiful of the near-by country towns, so that the student sees more than the city-slicker side of Spanish life.

The University of Barcelona, for one, is sponsoring classes in Palma on the island of Mallorca, from July 16 to August 6. From July 25 to August 25, for a tuition fee of $8, the University of Cadiz, will attempt to steep you in Spanish culture, language and history, and see that you experience fiestas, dances, sporting events and even take a side trip to Spanish North Africa.

For $9 the University of Burgos offers intensive language courses with attendant junkets in and around Burgos. Courses are offered in four degrees of fluency, so that kindergarteners in the language don't get into the same classes as

Triple A's Abroad

We see so many world-at-a-glance type of booklets that leave us less than enthusiastic that we want to report a neat little job that the American Automobile Association has done in this direction. It is now making available to its members a revised edition of "Here's How," a quick run-down on the idiosyncrasies of tipping, shopping, wine drinking, clothing sizes, weather, electric current and currency values in almost any major country you're likely to visit in the two hemispheres. To us it makes nice, terse, simple sense. Get it at your AAA office, if you're a member.

Denmark and Dining

These two words go together like aquavit and beer, as every traveler to Denmark soon discovers. For food is a Danish national preoccupation, and such are the siren ways of smøerrebroad (open-face sandwiches) and the koldt bord (cold buffet), that tourists get to be almost as bewitched by midget shrimps and Danish meat balls as they are by the Little Mermaid or the bright lights of the Tivoli pleasure gardens. They also get to be pretty attached to a Danish national drink known as Cherry Heering, a beautiful, fragrant cherry liqueur which seems to be as compatible with sponge cake and afternoon tea as it is with spiced herring, to say nothing of its affinity for other liquors in cocktails.

Now, whether you're about to embark for Denmark or are simply like us, a nostalgic lover of good things to eat, you can learn more about this distinctive food and drink in a colorful little booklet, "Entertain Differently in the Danish Manner," which the makers of the liqueur have lately published. Besides giving recipes and showing some winsome table settings laid with typical Danish silver and china, the booklet passes on some bits and pieces of sound culinary advice. It also made us so hungry and homesick we wanted to take the next SAS plane for Copenhagen. For a copy, write House Beautiful's Travel Department, 572 Madison Avenue, New York 22.

The handmade papers of Fine Arts, for instance, are flocked on a variety of rather special wall coverings, such as Japanese Tapis or grass-cloth, Shiki silk, paper scattered with mica, or on metallic papers. In juxtaposition with the textural softness of flocking, these backgrounds can be startlingly beautiful and effective.

Conventional flocking patterns tend to be medallions of the French and Italian Renaissance persuasion, but now any type of appropriate pattern is used—geometrics, free forms, what you will. Handmade flocked papers are made to special order, so that you can call up almost any color combination you may want.

For her white marble and mustard dining room, Martha called up a pale, pale gray flocking on silver metallic in a paper known as "18 Karat," which is an alternate patterning of 13" flocked and unflocked diamonds. We'll use it above the white dado on each side of the marble mantel. We'll do the floor in 13" diamonds of vinyl in two shades of gray and around the marble top dining table we'll use her six Venetian chairs, painted white and upholstered in a shocking golden mustard.—M. G.

"18 Karat" Flocked Wallpaper

THE NEW PACE SETTER KITCHEN

The central skylight of the kitchen, shown to the immediate left, has been screened against glare by wide ceiling panels of Honeylite, which also conceal the incandescent lighting. This new material, only  $\frac{1}{4}$ " thick, is an aluminum honeycomb that completely diffuses and reflects the light, to provide even, glareless lighting. Panels are very light in weight (only 2 ounces per square foot). Easy to remove, they may be cleaned by vacuum suction or by rinsing in clear water.

Typical of the simple refinements in this Pace Setter kitchen are the finger pulls in these cabinet doors, made by cutting corner of plywood front with a sloping saw cut. Opening is backed with blue plastic matching counter. Drawer fronts have finger grooves along under side.

new NOMA 'SPRAY'

complete underground sprinkler system

Spray your way to a luxury lawn! Gardeners know that nothing is so important in making a rich, strong, deep-rooted turf as regular watering. Only a permanent underground system can give you controlled watering and feeding—without "orphan spots" that turn brown and thin out.

You'll solve your biggest lawn problems forever when you invest in your Noma Spray permanent underground lawn sprinkler system. It's the one modern system designed to do the job right for your lawn, no matter how large or small!

LOOK AT THESE FEATURES!

- Square Spray Pattern—reaches corners
- Designed to Last a Lifetime!
- Rust Proof, Rot Proof, Freeze Proof (Even at 50° below!)
- Made of Black Flexible Vinyl with Bronze Fittings!
- Completely Assembled with Adjustable Spray Heads!

EASY TO INSTALL

Comes completely assembled. Nothing to put together. Add units as desired. Installs underground easily in minutes. No damage to lawn.

Make incision in ground with spade... 5 inches deep... insert Noma Spray, adjust volume of spray with key... That's all.

Approximate cost completely installed

1,000 sq. ft.	$ 44.95
2,000 sq. ft.	83.50
3,500 sq. ft.	142.50
5,000 sq. ft.	199.95

Noma Spray costs even less if you install it yourself.

Practical back-yard games

Part II

By LEAVITT DUDLEY

The main point of family games on a homemade back-yard court is that here is fun with freedom. Of course it's a good idea to conform to regulation measurements if you can, but nobody's going to report you if you simply haven't the space to keep everything official. And the same goes for game rules. You may find yourselves improvising some rules of your own, and why not? Back-yard games are geared for family fun, not professional training.

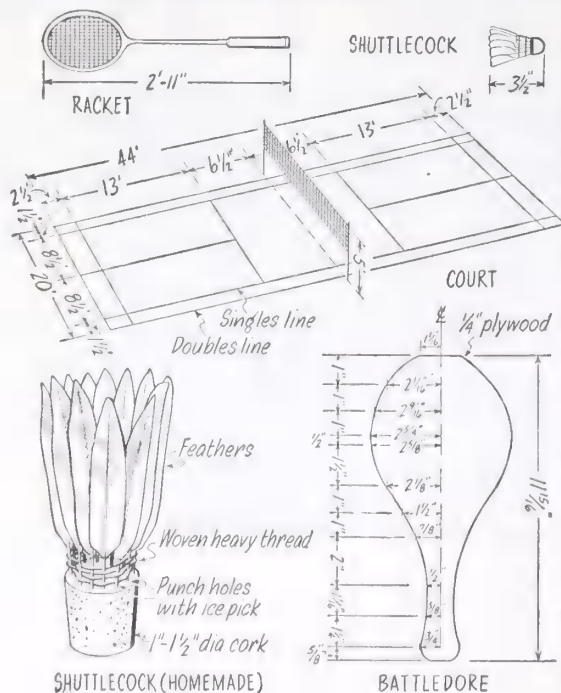

Don't expect the youngsters to like all the games that you enjoy as an adult. By anticipating their interests as they develop, you'll be able to plan the variety of home activities your whole family will enjoy. Courts mean little to children below the third grade level, when they will begin to play the simplest types of basketball. By the fourth grade, they will advance in basketball, and be ready for the game of peteca. Handball, tether ball, and badminton-type games come with grade five. Their interests broaden to include horseshoes, paddle tennis, table tennis, volley ball, and other net games during the sixth and seventh grades. By the eighth grade, they will have taken up bowling, shuffle-board, and can probably still give competition to their parents in most back-yard sports.

Many variations of popular games are possible on the following basic courts:

BADMINTON

Best playing surface: concrete or asphalt. To save wear and tear on more expensive rackets and shuttlecocks by youngsters who are just developing interest in badminton-type games, you can make inexpensive substitutes. For a shuttlecock, stick 10 to 16 chicken or turkey feathers into a cork 1" to 1½" in diameter. Trim feathers to allow 1" quills. They should be nearly the same length and size. The battledore, a substitute racket, is band-sawed from ¼" plywood.

PETECA RIO

Best playing surface: any net-game court, with or without net. A game for younger children. Equipment: peteca (hit with the hand). Four canvas or leather sides and a bottom-piece are sewn together, filled at the bottom with sand or birdshot, and the neck is wrapped tightly with heavy string to hold five or six long turkey feathers in place. (Ready-made sponge-rubber petecas are sold in most department stores.)

DECK TENNIS

Best playing surface: Use concrete or asphalt. Rings for deck tennis may be sponge or hollow rubber. You can make these rings at home out of manila rope or rubber hose.

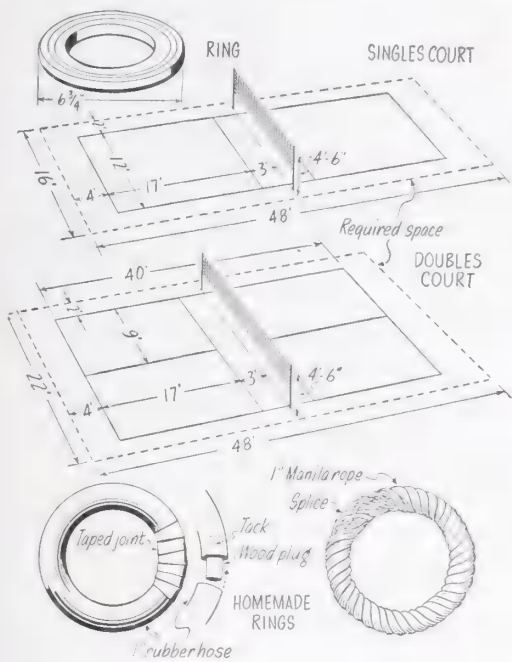

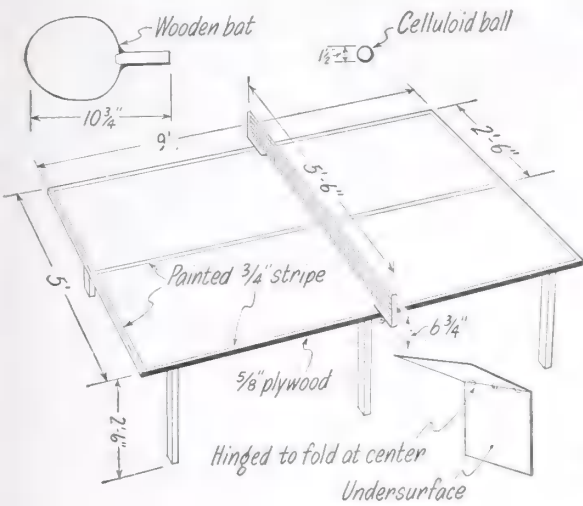

TABLE TENNIS

Best playing surface: 5/8" plywood, painted dark green with white markings, supported by table or sawhorses on level surface. An 8' x 4' top is also suitable for home use if space is limited. Top may be hinged to center for better storage when not in use.

BASKETBALL

Best playing surface: concrete or asphalt. Back yards are usually too small to accommodate full regulation courts, and games are played around one goal only.

Installation: Backboard of  $\frac{3}{4}$ " plywood may be the rectangular style or the smaller modified type. The larger size will be easier for small children to hit, will keep the ball in play better, and is easy to install against a large flat surface. The smaller size is neater appearing, requires less bulky mountings, and is better for difficult installations exposed to wind. Bolt goal to board, then affix assembly firmly to an overhanging eave, gable, or wall so the board is at least 2 feet out from a solid wall. You may have to build out to a safe distance with brackets.

Official goal height is 10 feet, but this should be reduced to 9 feet for children or upper elementary grade ages or to 8 feet for lower grade levels.

GOAL-HI (POLE-GOAL BASKETBALL)

Best playing surface: concrete or asphalt. Size of court can vary to fit your space restrictions. Installation: Commercial standard rests on its own base when in use. For home play, a cheaper version can be assembled of welded steel rod and galvanized steel pipe, designed to adjust to goal heights of 10, 9 and 8 feet. When in use, the unit is held in position by a pipe sleeve similar to that holding a volley ball post, or other net games posts.

HANDBALL

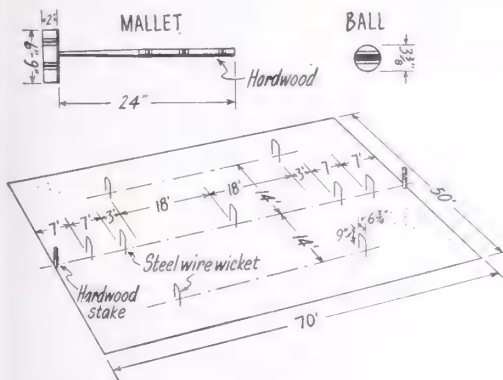

Best playing surface: concrete or asphalt, wood backstop. Modified versions of the one-wall game are the only courts practical for average back yards. Driveways or other game courts can serve as playing surfaces; smooth double - garage doors, windowless walls, or high fences as backstops. Though height and width may not be official, youngsters can still have a lot of fun and exercise on such a court.

TETHER BALL

Snap the tether ball cord to the eye-ring with halter snap. The cord may be lengthened, so when smaller children want to play they can reach the ball.

CROQUET

Best playing surface: concrete or asphalt, wood backstop. Modified versions of the one-wall game are the only courts practical for average back yards. Driveways or other game courts can serve as playing surfaces; smooth double - garage

Best playing surface: concrete or asphalt. Installation: Use a 13-foot length of 2"-diameter galvanized pipe, thread end of pipe, top with pipe cap drilled for 1/4" eye-bolt. Set 3 feet into ground in pipe sleeve, similar to net games post.

Best playing surface: smooth, level lawn, with the grass clipped short. The dimensions given may be reduced proportionately to fit the court into smaller lots.

HORSESHOES

Best playing surface: shallow pits of soft dirt or sand. Backstops behind stakes are necessities on the residential lot to prevent rolling and damage by poorly thrown shoes. Installation: Two iron or soft steel stakes one inch in diameter (or pipes) are driven into the ground 40 feet apart for regulation distance, 30 feet apart for play by women and children under sixteen. Four horseshoes weigh  $2\frac{1}{2}$  pounds each.

CLOCK GOLF

Best playing surface: smooth, level lawn, the close-clipped grass. Installation: Punch holes in bottom of can for drainage, set into ground flush with surface for putting hole. Mark off court as shown in the sketch. Equipment: a tin can four inches in diameter, a regulation putter and golf ball for each player.

SHUFFLE-BOARD

Best playing surface: smooth concrete (a level driveway may be your best location). Mark court with  $\frac{3}{4}$ "-wide lines of high quality oil or varnish base paint. Dimensions are measured to centers of lines.

With Sibelius's Second, the symphony marks an ending—and a new beginning as well—of a musical form almost two hundred years old

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

How to enjoy a symphony

Conclusion

We are about to close the door on the Nineteenth Century. The room is still filled with the glow of Tchaikovsky's Pathétique Symphony, that misty-eyed but fiery sun, which we observed last month. Its light, so rich and extravagant, will be sufficient—it will have to be sufficient—to warm us 50 years more. Our musical world is still being illuminated by the romantic Nineteenth Century.

Now we step across to a colder region. We shall have to get used to a light less rosy, a glow less steady. We shall have to attune our ears to melodies of shorter breath. The long, lyric flow will flicker, harmonies will twist and shift uneasily, reflecting a new nervousness.

Not all at once, of course. The change did not come overnight. "Romantic" didn't end and "Modern" begin with a definite date line, without one flowing gradually into the other. In art anything that is altogether new is probably altogether foolish. One may suspect any work in which preceding influences are not to be found.

Six years after the Pathétique, Jan Sibelius published his First Symphony. He was then thirty-four years old and had already acquired considerable fame by such shorter symphonic works as En Saga, The Swan of Tuonela, and the patriotic Finlandia. His First Symphony, appearing with a nice sense of historic orderliness exactly as the Nineteenth Century turned into the Twentieth, is obviously and clearly influenced by Tchaikovsky. He was inheriting the old in the process of developing the new. In point of fact, Sibelius's First is more old than new, though its harmonic language uses some new idioms and includes expressions less mellifluous than those which Peter Ilyitch would have employed. It has been called "Tchaikovsky's Seventh," much as Brahms' First Symphony was nicknamed "Beethoven's Tenth." But out of this First very shortly developed the Second, which appeared three years later.

This Second Symphony is more new than old, a product of the Twentieth Century. To be sure, compared to the latest work of a Milhaud or a Hindemith, the Second is old-fashioned stuff, not in the least "frightening." But it does embody a new principle.

We have observed that the basic structure of the romantic symphony lies in the statement of two or more themes, themes of strongly contrasting nature, one being dramatic, the other a lyrical one. In the Exposition, these melodies spring into being fully grown, are put before our ears once or twice or as often as the composer deems advisable, and only when we have become familiar with them are they changed, broken into fragments, pitched one against the other, used for allusion, subjected to adventure.

Sibelius's method differs from this. The Exposition of the Second Symphony presents to us fragments (Please turn to page 6)

How you can set your family up for house-keeping!

New York Life's low-cost MORTGAGE PROTECTION PLAN gives heirs cash to pay the balance due on your home.

A home is usually the most important purchase of a man's life. It's the possession he chooses with the greatest care . . . the one he wants most to protect for his family's present and future welfare.

That's why so many men today are taking out New York Life's insurance plans designed especially for mortgage cancellation. If he should die unexpectedly, such a plan assures a man that his family will immediately receive enough cash to pay off the mortgage remaining on his home. Yet the cost per month of this vital protection is very small.

Say, for example, you're age 30 and have a 20-year mortgage for $10,000. You can buy a $10,000 Mortgage Protection policy at a premium cost of little more than $5 a month. And dividends after the second year could be used to reduce premium payments. If you died the first year, your family would receive the full $10,000. If you died later and mortgage payments had been kept up to date, they would receive at least enough cash to pay off the unpaid balance. During the last 5 years the amount would remain constant at $3,500. And after 20 years, the policy would terminate without value. This is decreasing term insurance.

An alternate plan combines decreasing term insurance with permanent life insurance. While premiums are somewhat higher, this plan builds cash values which can be used for your own retirement. Or you can continue life insurance protection after you've paid off your mortgage.

Ask your New York Life agent about this low cost protection that can keep your home in the family—and your family in their home. Or mail the coupon today!

of themes. We do not hear definitely clear-cut melodies, which are then taken to pieces. We hear the pieces first. Gradually the pieces move together until they form an orderly design. This is inversion of a long accepted principle.

The Development section of the first movement is the one in which the themes are brought together, where the picture is built of fragments into a whole, and the canvas is completed. Then, in the Recapitulation of the first movement, the themes are dispersed again, disintegration follows integration, until the movement ends in a void.

At the very opening of the symphony, the difference becomes at once instructive. The symphony begins with a groundswell of mutterings by the strings, setting a mood of expectancy. We then hear a broken theme played by the oboe and clarinet, another by the bassoon, and it is only when these preliminaries have passed that the violins in unison sing out what may in the old language be called the main theme. All of this musical material is used with almost equal prominence in the course of the movement. It is the task of the Development section to complete all the themes. In doing so, it enables music of great force to emerge.

HOW TO ENJOY A SYMPHONY—Conclusion

The second movement is a tense andante, which is ominous in tone and becomes ever more dramatic in its progress until it rises to a violent climax. The third is the counterpart to the scherzo of the Beethoven symphony and contains the classical trio. This leads into a great finale, which, again, owes something to romantic music, because it is a movement of triumph, accomplishment and jubilation.

SINCE the symphony was written, it has become the custom among certain musical intellectuals to deride the "happy ending" of the symphonic form. Could this be because we no longer know how to compose a convincing jubilation, that we no longer know how to shout in triumph without being a little embarrassed? At any rate, here in the Second Symphony the last movement is still unashamedly exuberant, and no doubt the popularity of the symphony is based to some extent on this glorious finale.

The musical material used in the entire symphony is very closely linked, one theme to another. We can discover, if we wish to, that practically all the themes spring from a single germ-motive of three notes. Interrelation is nothing new. The nineteenth-century composer was no stranger to it. But in Sibelius and in the modern symphony this interrelation becomes closer and more conscious. The result is that the musical texture becomes ever more tightly woven.

The modern symphony tends toward compression. The melodies themselves become compressed; we no longer want to sing with open throats and throw out our arms in a wide gesture. As compression takes place, the conventional four movements of the symphony seem no longer necessary. When Sibelius arrives at his Seventh Symphony, finished in 1924, we are confronted with a work in one single movement, and, incidentally, a work so dense that it has not so far captured public favor.

Whatever be the ultimate judgment of Sibelius, whether 50 years from now he will be considered a great composer or merely a transitory one, it is certain that he is an innovator, the most valuable kind of innovator, one who combines new elements with old. Lawrence Gilman has called him a profound inscrutable, yet candid spirit. He is not, I repeat, a modernist in the advanced or acerbic sense. But the new principles on which he worked you will find used in such symphonies as those of Prokofieff, particularly the Fifth, which in my opinion is very fine music, and in the symphonies of Shostakovich, which in my opinion are overblown and second-rate products.

THESE judgments have to be tentative. We are not far enough removed from any of these works to pronounce an authoritative verdict. It is even possible, though not probable, that somewhere is hidden a modern symphony which has been totally unrecognized, and which in the future will rise to fame. Only of one musical fact can we be sure: The symphony as a form has by no means outlived its usefulness; its history is by no means completed. Sibelius has shown how it can be changed. Subsequent composers will undoubtedly change it further.

With this article our cursory and by necessity, spotty discussion of the symphony comes to an end.

GUATEMALAN SKIRT. This is the skirt that globe-trotter travel to far-away places for, and bring home by the armful. Handloomed from long-fibre Indian cotton, the Mayan designs are fingerwoven into material at time of looming. With pocket, zippered placket, it comes in navy, green, black, brown, red. Waist sizes 24-26-28-30-31. $11.95 ppd. Beverly Baker, Box 135, Darien, Conn.

TERRIFIC PIN. The only thing that keeps this from wearing an astronomical price tag is the lack of the "14k" mark. But in style it is indeed as good as gold. The 18k gold-plated swirl design, set with a simulated pearl, has a modern classic rhythm that would be wonderful with a suit or a black sheath. 2" long, $3.95. Earrings, $3.95. Set, $7.50. Ppd. ## NEWLYWED TELLS ALL ABOUT HER SECRET LOVE

Like many newly married couples, the Jack Harts of Park Forest, Ill., had a limited budget. They had to furnish their home a bit at a time. Mrs. Hart loved what furniture they had. It was beautiful; but her big worry was how to keep it that way. A Free Catalog solved her problem. Now her furniture is protected by fitted covers made of amazing Window Clear plastic. Mr. Hart can relax on the sofa to his heart's content without fear of dirtying the upholstery!

These sturdy covers are non-porous so dust, dirt, liquids cannot get through. They give complete, full-time protection. And the plastic is super-clear so every detail of upholstery color and pattern shows through. Mrs. Hart says: "Thanks to your wonderful covers, I can keep my new sofa and chairs as clean and lovely as the day they were delivered. Your covers fit good, look good, and are so inexpensive. I recommend them to anyone who wants to keep their furniture clean all the time!"

Unmistakable! The taste with the Pabst Blue Ribbon Touch

Every year thousands of Pabst brewery visitors taste-test our beer against other brands. What they say helps us make sure the taste with the Pabst Blue Ribbon Touch (PBRT for short) is the taste America prefers.

And, to keep that happy touch of flavor true, trained beer tasters sample every brewing before we let it wear our label. Pabst is the only major brewer with a Gustometric Laboratory for scientific taste-testing like this.

To appreciate the advantage just make your own taste-test. Answer "Pabst Blue Ribbon!" next time you hear "What'll you have?"

"The Taste with the Touch" now comes not only in regular bottles and cans, but also in a brand new Snap-Cap Full Quart can.

How to leave home and like it

By MARION GOUGH

Some of our best friends are travel agents. We find them an ingratiating lot. Once you've experienced the helpful, willing and time-saving ways of a good travel agent, you want to go back for more of the same. These enthusiastic interpreters of time tables, these people who understand the mysteries of getting a ticket validated, who know, sort of magically, which hotels have rooms available on October 5 or which ferry boat will be in the slip by the time your car gets there at 3 P.M. on Thursday—well, they make you wonder why you ever before tackled the confusing job of making your own itinerary and reservations. They can do all this quickly and deftly with materials they have at their fingertips, sending you off, tickets and reservation vouchers in hand, with nothing on your mind except to enjoy yourself, and usually this extra added service won't cost you a cent beyond the price of your vacation.

The truth is that the travel agent's function is so veiled in apocryphal hearsay that far too many people shy away from taking advantage of his services, and by so doing add needlessly to their own headaches. Just to dispel a few myths: A travel agent is not a high-falutin' luxury. He does not automatically add a service fee to the cost of a trip; he does not have hallucinations of grandeur about your bankroll; he does not insist that you travel in a body as part of a conducted tour, if

It's a beautiful thing to handle!

Pick out a '56 Chevy owner—one who recently switched from another make of car—and ask, in a comparative kind of way, about Chevrolet handling and safety. Easier to park? Quicker reflexes in traffic? Holds the road better taking corners and curves?

We'll bet you get 100 percent affirmative answers. Because we know for a fact that Chevrolet's one of the few cars being built today with such handling ease, pep and roadability. Chevy proved that by breaking the Pikes Peak record. And proved it again by taking top honors in its field at the NASCAR Daytona Beach time trials.

What's the secret? Lively horsepower up to 225—plus a beautiful combination of road-car qualities that other cars don't have. Drive a Chevy and see what we mean. . . . Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Michigan.

KITCHEN OF MR. AND MRS. ELLIS GIMBEL, MIAMI, FLORIDA

Reporting on a new breed of woman

House Beautiful has watched the clear emergence, since the war, of a new attitude among women toward homemaking. They are finding that housekeeping and family management are fascinating, enjoyable pursuits, offering the fullest opportunities to express themselves and their capabilities. Why this big change?

The next 42 pages report on typical case histories in this new trend and the big secret behind the change.

Mrs. Gimbel regards her house as a big empty stage on which to present her play with colors, forms and accessories. A predominantly white color scheme, she feels, gives her the greatest latitude to make every possible combination.

The home of a woman who adores homemaking

es housekeeping

ew York Times. Press Seventh Avenue were een continued after f she had wanted it.
id more women are trade does not offer

Mr. Gimbel's den used to double as a sewing room. Now she uses the maid's room, since she has no maid.

Living-dining spaces flow together as one uninterrupted space. Yellow rectangle on ceiling marks dining table.

This side of the house looks out toward Biscayne Bay. The simplicity of the architecture, on the outside as well as the inside, lends itself to a few bold touches, such as the huge shell on the edge of the terrace.
Mrs. Gimbel rotates accessories like the Japanese, having only a few out at a time.

Table top is white Formica, because white surface lends itself to vibrant color schemes. Mrs. Gimbel's wardrobe of table appointments is very colorful.

A brand new factor is appearing in the world of women.
It is the change in their attitudes about housework and homemaking. It is a switch from hating it to liking it. The home on these opening five pages, which is the scene of operations for Mrs. Ellis Gimbel, conveys a lot of the spirit of this great change in women's feelings.

Maida Gimbel's attitude toward her chosen way of life has special importance to this HOUSE BEAUTIFUL report on the new breed of women we see appearing. Before her marriage Maida had what might be called a glamorous career in the fashion world, and it could have been continued after marriage.
She made, by hand, silver jewelry for chic merchants like Lily Daché and John Fredericks. She painted scarves for Hattie Carnegie and ties for Countess Mara. (Please turn the page)

Stark simplicity, executed in vibrant, almost Mexican, colors against white, is the theme song of the Gimbel house. It lets Mrs. Gimbel indulge her penchant for artistic playfulness with the common, useful objects of homemaking. She "composes" as successfully with a wastebasket as with an art object.

Architect: Wahl Snyder
 Decorator: Haygood Lasseter

Setting a table so it will make a dramatic presentation of her cooking is one of Mrs. Gimbel's prime passions. Not only the appointments, but the food itself are worked into her scheme. She likes at least one "spectacular" dish for every meal. A towering croque-en-bouche is the chef-d'oeuvre for this occasion.

The home of a woman who adores housekeeping continued

She did fashion illustrations for The New York Times. Press parties at "21" and fashion openings on Seventh Avenue were daily events. Most of this could have been continued after she moved from New York to Miami—if she had wanted it.

But she had discovered what more and more women are discovering: that success in the marts of trade does not offer the deep satisfactions that can be found in caring for a family and the pursuit of the womanly arts. "When my thirteen-year-old daughter won an art prize, I was more thrilled than when I sold my first big jewelry order to Macy," she mused.

The stylish look of her house shows (Please turn to page 100)

I'm one of the happy breed

By MARVA P. SHEARER

House Beautiful's Family Editor

In the last six months the publishing field has broken out in a rash of articles about the unhappy and unhealthy lot of the present-day housewife. All told, they paint a rather dismal picture of fatigue, frustration and failure. Without intending to contradict these findings (for they undoubtedly are true of the cases examined), I would simply like to report on another segment of our feminine population. I think I and my kind are setting a trend—a trend worth reporting on. We may even be more typical of what is happening than the much written about “unhappy housewife.”

Everywhere I go, in Connecticut and Florida, in Kansas and California. I find there is a marked swing toward what HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has been privately calling “the womanly arts.” Among the great majority who used to be passive, bored and imitative in their planning and home management, there is now an awakened interest and a new enthusiasm. Women, who before the war would have considered it degrading to work in the kitchen, are now cooking with zest, relish and skill, and they’re turning out food that is far superior to what the average hired cook can do. Leisured ladies, whose daytime diversions once consisted of shopping, bridge parties and committee meetings, now seem to find more satisfaction in gardening, needlework and dozens of other home-centered hobbies.

Why this is so, I’ll venture to theorize about later on. But for the time being I’d like to go on record as saying that the housewives I know are a most happy breed, enjoying their roles of housekeeper, cook and manager.

To be sure, the women whose homes I visit, whose outlook interests me and whose lives reflect my own, are a fairly homogeneous group. Our children have just begun to go to school or are well into school, so they need no longer claim most of our time and strength. Our husbands are not struggling to gain a foothold in their fields. They are well-established—albeit hardworking. The families I meet or know enjoy an income with a margin for safety and comfort, and their homes are designed to make living as easy and pleasant as possible.

In other words, these housewives are over the hump, as mothers, and are now living in a kind of golden age, as women.

To them it really does appear to be a golden age. As I talk to more and more competent housewives, I am impressed by their attitude toward homemaking. They are deft, skillful, practically professional. They are organized and have the household situation under control—at least most of the time.

Rather than feeling trapped and embittered, the women I meet carry a quiet air of accomplishment. They know that they’re good (Please turn the page) at what they're doing. They have ideas and their opinions carry weight, because they speak with a conviction born of experience.

I also notice that these housewives, who are deft and skilled at running a home, admire others who are similarly adept. So they form a coterie or intimate group. To have a standing among such women, it's not what clubs one belongs to, but whether or not one can make a good salad dressing. With them an original and effective table setting counts more than an expensive wardrobe. And they tend to knowledgeably debate new cooking techniques and improved housekeeping equipment the way their husbands discuss the stock market.

To illustrate the point further—at a birthday party for a well-known writer a short time ago, one of the presents to him was a round loaf of home-baked bread. It was no gag. An attractive guest had baked it, because she knew it would please her host. And, mind you, this was a party for a sophisticated group of New York and Hollywood literary people; but the homemade bread was the most genuinely admired gift of the evening. Would a cosmopolitan wife have felt comfortable bringing such a gift a dozen years ago? I don't think so. But by today's standards she is considered original and quite chic, proving once more, I believe, that the womanly arts are in the ascendency.

When I ask my friends and neighbors if they find housework boring and repetitious, they say: No, far from it. One midwestern college-friend summed up her thinking by remarking, "As I see it, housework divides into two departments—the physical and the mental. The things that don't take much thought, like dusting and making beds, have to be done and they are rather good exercise. So, while I'm zipping through these low-mental chores, I think about all the fun things.

"During the physical part of my work, I plan menus, mull over decorating ideas and dream about the way I want the garden to look. Then, as soon as the routine cleaning is done, I'm ready for one of the really creative sides of housekeeping."

For some this means cooking. They enjoy experimenting with traditional delicacies (like bread-making) and concocting new, foreign dishes, that take time and concentration to prepare. To them, a good cookbook can be as engrossing reading as a best-seller. They try new restaurants for the food ideas they can bring home. Travel gains an added dimension for them, because of the first-hand opportunity to sample a foreign cuisine.

In fact, everything they do—the herbs they plant, the utensils they use, the dishes they buy—is part of a fascinating study of enlightened housekeeping.

With others the most creative side of housework is gardening. A neighbor of ours, for example, who travels extensively with her engineer-husband, is interested in raising the kind of exotic plants that flourish in countries whose climate is the same as ours. She starts every tree and shrub from seed, which she carries home in her handbag. She has brought back literally dozens of different species of eucalyptus, bottle brush, callistemon and erythrina from Australia, Africa, India and the South Seas. Her back-yard hobby has grown to the point where the municipal horticulturists come to her for seedlings and advice about new growth they might try in city parks.

I could go on at length telling of wives who weave the fabric for their husband's sports jackets and for their table linen, who upholster furniture, who design and make jewelry at home. But the point is this—the variety and wealth of possibilities inherent in housekeeping don't seem to begin to dawn on the average woman until two things happen: She has to get "out of the woods" of baby care, and she has to have some knowledge—knowledge of the sciences and arts that underlie homemaking.

But even before the children are going to school she can begin to build a fund of knowledge about housekeeping. Knowledge is crucial. Contrary to popular theory, you have to know something about a subject to become interested in it. It's the technicalities that are at the root of this interest. I've noted that the women who are bored with homemaking are generally the ones who don't know anything about it.

I've discovered what is probably a basic truth: that the more expertly I do something, the more I enjoy doing it. For example:

How do you take the mindlessness out of cooking? Not by always taking it easy, by knowing less and less. It is by doing more and more, by knowing more and more about what you are doing that cooking becomes fun. For instance, once you start wondering about the taste-difference between cooking with peanut oil and cooking with butter or with olive oil, you are really unlocking a door to a wonderful world as big as the whole world, as big as all human history. Just as the basis of fine architecture and a fine cuisine is respect for the nature of the material itself and of the problem, so it is the secret to successful homemaking.

As Mrs. Wiley says in this issue: "The pleasure of knowing, of exploring, of weighing one way against another, seems to be the characteristic of this new happy breed of housekeepers and homemakers." They are relaxed, because they are doing what they love to do. And they do it well, because they know all about it and find it such fun.

Our greatest satisfaction from housework comes indirectly. It comes when we see that our husbands and children are happy, when we feel we're providing the proper home climate for them. Then we know we are the nucleus of the family unit. It behooves us to create a home atmosphere that is serene and yet stimulating, cultured and sometimes comical. I know I've been successful when my husband would rather eat at home than go out for dinner, when he spends Sunday on the terrace and not on the golf course, when he would rather talk to me than look at television.

One of our favorite husbands remarked not long ago that he honestly enjoyed drying dishes for his wife, because it was the only activity she did where she couldn't do anything else but carry on a conversation with him. The compliment struck us as being nicely romantic.

The children, of course, are even more candid in their acceptance or rejection of home base. At a pretty tender age they figure out whose mother bakes cookies and pops popcorn, and that's where they're likely to hang out. Next they canvass the neighborhood to find a back yard where they can dig a foxhole or build a hut. Later it's a question of borrowing the car or bringing dates to the house. The mother who can find time and room for such youthful needs has the reward of keeping her children home that much longer.

If, as social observers say, the mores of the American family are changing, so that the parents and children do stay home together more, then we say this is due to the women who are making home attractive, and not entirely to TV.

Just why women like Mrs. Gimbel and our own Virginia Stanton (on a wider scale) are making a name for themselves in their communities as superb housewives is interesting to note. We would like to suggest four possible reasons.

In the first place, we believe it's a natural swing of the pendulum.

After a 100-year history of battling for emancipation and the right to compete with men on equal terms, the American woman has won her case. She can have a career or not. There is no more cause to protest and prove her right as an individual. Now, with the pressure off, more women are choosing to excel at home rather than be half-hearted in the business world.

Secondly, a growing realization that many of our social ills can be offset by providing a stable and satisfying home atmosphere is causing many women to look homeward again to their traditional province. Such widespread problems as husbands suffering from heart trouble and hypertension can be met by insuring them a restful home life.

Confused juveniles can be helped by a strong and wholesome family background. The unhappy act of divorce is less likely to happen where the home ties are strong. And emotional disturbances of all types can be stemmed right at the start, if Mother is really in charge.

The virtual disappearance of trained, domestic help is opening a lot of women's eyes. Given the choice of bungling along with incompetent workers under foot, many women choose to do their own cooking and cleaning. Even when their education has trained them for professional or business work, their common sense tells them that a home and family are their first responsibility. When they do turn their minds to it, the results are warmly rewarding.

And, lastly, traffic, smog, over-crowding and all the irritations of living are enough to make women who don't have to earn a living, stay home.

Here's our rule for recognizing the new breed of housewife: She's almost always at home.

Mrs. Wiley, our author, and her family off for a sail.

"I have discovered that homemaking and house-keeping really have the status of an art. To know, to care, to have the multiple skills, to be willing to give thought—these are the essentials of what HOUSE BEAUTIFUL calls 'the womanly arts.' The womanly arts are for joy—all kinds of joy. Being grim and tense about it is not the way to achieve this joy. Being well organized and well-informed is the way."

"The dilemma of modern woman is of her own making"

By one who figured her way out of her own dilemma

MARY ELIZABETH WILEY

All these emotional outpourings I've been reading lately about the anguished plight of the young mother leave me saddened and just a little mad. To hear them tell it, nothing short of a Congressional Investigation can cope with this national disgrace. The sad part is that if you tell people long enough they are in a bad way, you'll convince them they really are.

Now, I am a young mother, with three children under twelve years of age. And most of my friends are close to my age. So I don't exactly live in a vacuum or on a pink cloud. I know the realities of child-bearing and housekeeping from my own experience and the experiences of my friends.

From where I sit, things aren't as bad as these magazine writers would have you believe. And if they are that bad, in individual cases, it is because the "young mother" hasn't got herself organized. She hasn't figured out how to make sense of what apparently appears to her as a senseless buffeting from endless demands on her strength and her time.

One group of mothers estimated their work-week averaged 115 hours per mother, and from the sound of things they didn't achieve a very high standard. Even at the risk of sounding smug, I can tell you that the total work-week for the whole Wiley menage averages only 34 hours. (This includes my time, a part-time helper's, my husband John's, and 11-year-old Lisa's. But it wouldn't be that low, if I hadn't decided several years back that I would have to bring some order into my life or I would be worked to death. I, too, was being buffeted about like a sailboat in a sudden squall. I was never caught up on my work, because I never said No to anybody or to any request. And I was trying to run a house that was a woman-killer—all white woodwork, hand-scrubbed mahogany floors, and rooms on three floors. It was a darling house, but I was a slave to it. It was clear that if I were to get my life under control, It would have to start with our moving into another house.

So move we did. But in the move a lot of other things were changed. We stored the white hand-hooked rugs and now use rush squares. We now use denim slip covers and machine-washable bedspreads, siliconed fabrics and black Naugahyde upholstery. I gave away all the medium-grade clutter. I saved the fine objects, but stored them in barrels in the garage till later, when the children will all be in school and have reached a more responsible age. I tried to use, wherever possible, only those surfaces and materials which need no care at all—stainless steel, plastic, rush table mats, good paper napkins, and the like.

There is so much on the market these days to help you. But you have to know about it or it does you no good. So many women are a complete blank on the thousands of things that are waiting to help them. They could read about them in service magazines or on the labels attached to the products in the store. I see them pick up a labor-saving gadget, and, if they don't understand it at first glance, put it down, not asking about it or even reading the label.

Here they are living in the most wonderful age of all time, when the whole output of innumerable industries is geared to help them, yet some women don't even know it is there. No wonder they work 115 hours a week!

Then there's another type of woman, who owns a lot of mechanized household equipment, but is licked before she starts to use it. She operates on the premise, "I can get it all done in an hour if I have to." As a result she drifts and dawdles without a workmanlike routine. She doesn't get the work out of the way early, so the house looks like an unmade bed most of the time. She doesn't really "go at it" intelligently. I'm quite convinced that of those 115 hours a week some women claim to work, quite a number are spent on the telephone, drinking warmed-over coffee, stopping to read (Please turn to page 94)

A new puppet comes to life in Mrs. Dawson's hands.

She tries her hand at anything and succeeds at everything

There is hardly a craft or an art that hasn't been explored by this lady. She operates expertly in seven fields with never a qualm of self-doubt

Velma Dawson is a wonder to her friends. They think she was born with some special gifts that God didn't give to them. For she whips up, virtually at the first try, successful projects in the fields of mosaics, embroidery, wood carving, modeling with clay and plaster, puppet making and sewing.

But Mrs. Dawson does not think she has any special gifts—unless it is that of curiosity. She believes any woman could do what she does.

"You don't know what you can do, if you won't try," she said to HOUSE BEAUTIFUL with great emphasis. "Most people are licked before they start. All this ability that everybody thinks is so crucial is nothing more than self-confidence—plus some actual experience.

"Of course, the more skills you develop in the various crafts the more you widen your range. I've always liked to tinker with glues, paints, putty, spackle, wires, modeling clay. Been doing it all my life. And I love tools—power tools, any kind of tools at all."

Mrs. Dawson's own house is eloquent proof of all this. For she has turned her hand to almost all the crafts where art is a welcome handmaiden. She embroiders big wall hangings, (Continued overleaf)

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The living room features Mrs. Dawson's first venture into creative embroidery—the piece hanging on the far wall (close-up opposite), which she did with a simple running stitch.

This bold embroidery is the star of the living room. After completing the design and tracing it onto the orange burlap, Mrs. Dawson spent only one week of afternoons on the stitchery itself. Note how the orange burlap peeks through the embroidery to become an important part of the color plan.

This sparkling mosaic is Mrs. Dawson's first try at the art. Before embarking on such a project, she read several magazine articles on "how-to-make mosaics," including HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's August, 1955, story. But, as in all her projects, she plunged in self-confidently, without standing in awe of the experts or taking their advice literally. She devised her own system of pasting the glass pieces face up, using "Wilhold" glue as the adhesive. She carefully clipped each tile as close to shape as she could, then smoothed the edges for a closer fit with an electric grinder. As a result, there were no spaces between the tesserae, so the customary grouting was unnecessary. Result: technically, as well as esthetically, a fine original mosaic.

The decoration on this framed mirror appropriately reflects the theater. The swags at the top and bottom of the frame are pieces of cheesecloth dipped in plaster of Paris, draped on the frame and allowed to harden in position. The figurines are modeled right on the frame, out of spackle (a putty-like substance used by plasterers). A casein paint was used on the mirror frame. Note touches of glitter, like the imitation "diamonds" for the lady's jeweled hand mirror and headpiece. Pink and white plaid swags match Martex towels.

makes decorative mosaics, sews anything that she wants made, carves wood, models with plaster, makes puppets from scratch to the final stage performance.

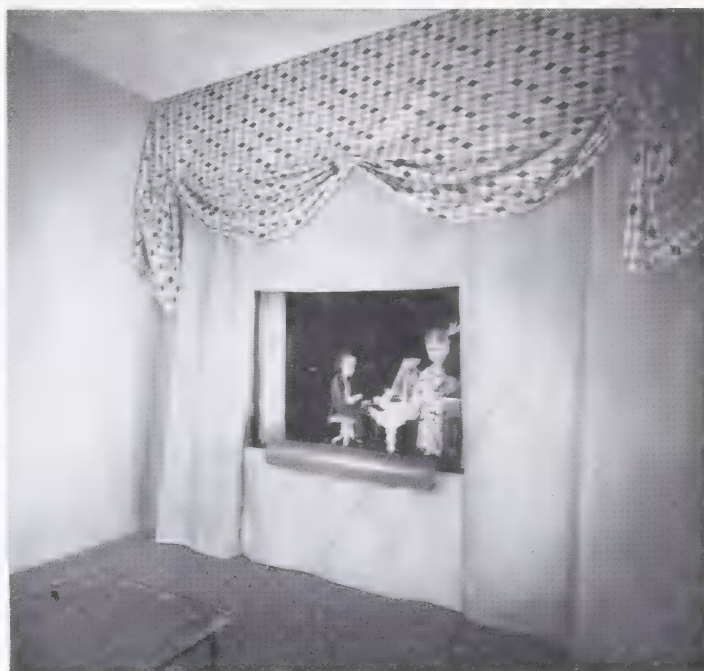

"And I have such fun doing it that I lose all sense of the passing of time. There is hardly anything I want that I can't make. But I didn't acquire all 'this overnight. You do it a little bit at a time."

Mrs. Dawson walked through the door to the wonderful craft world when only fifteen. It started when she became interested in puppets. In those days there were no ready-made toy puppets on the market, so she had to make her own. And she discovered that to make puppets required about every skill in the book. She had to learn how to do so many kinds of work to satisfy her enthusiasm for puppets that she got over—permanently—all awe of tools, materials or techniques. Everything was just a means to her end—to make an easy-to-operate, amusing puppet.

"It was all play to me. I didn't know enough to know I didn't know. That was probably the key to my success, if you can call it (Text continued on page 101. More pictures on next page.)

Puppets are fun to make, but wood carving can take other directions, too. Here are three Kachina dolls made for one wall of the Thunderbird clubhouse near Palm Springs.

Top: Friends are entertained in the little puppet theater at home. The stage, the lighting, the scenery and the curtain were all designed and made by Mrs. Dawson. She writes scripts and manipulates her actors.

Above: Puppets are almost people. Here are ten of Mrs. Dawson's character-creations. They include Uncle Remus characters, an esthetic-looking pianist, a ballerina, clown, sultan and an opera singer.

Left: Quickie performances are given outdoors. Even Pepe, her French poodle, gets into the act. Since she was fifteen, Mrs. Dawson has been making her puppets, doing her own modeling, engineering and stringing.

It takes simply a free-roaming, uninhibited eye to see the connection between plastic Christmas snowflakes and decorating chintz. Mrs. Dawson saw how they could be correlated. So she used Patterson's "Sunburst" chintz (black snowflakes on a white ground) as the theme of her bedroom. Then she painted the Christmas snowflakes black and scattered them over the plain masonry walls—even tacked onto the window screens. A nice fun stunt!

Because Mr. Dawson, a well-known golf champion, owned so many silver trophies, his wife has tried to use them as furnishings. She converted this punch bowl into a lamp base by padding the bottom with paper, then topping it with glass fruit, which she painted with white paint. The white shade was custom made. It looks fine in the white and black bedroom.

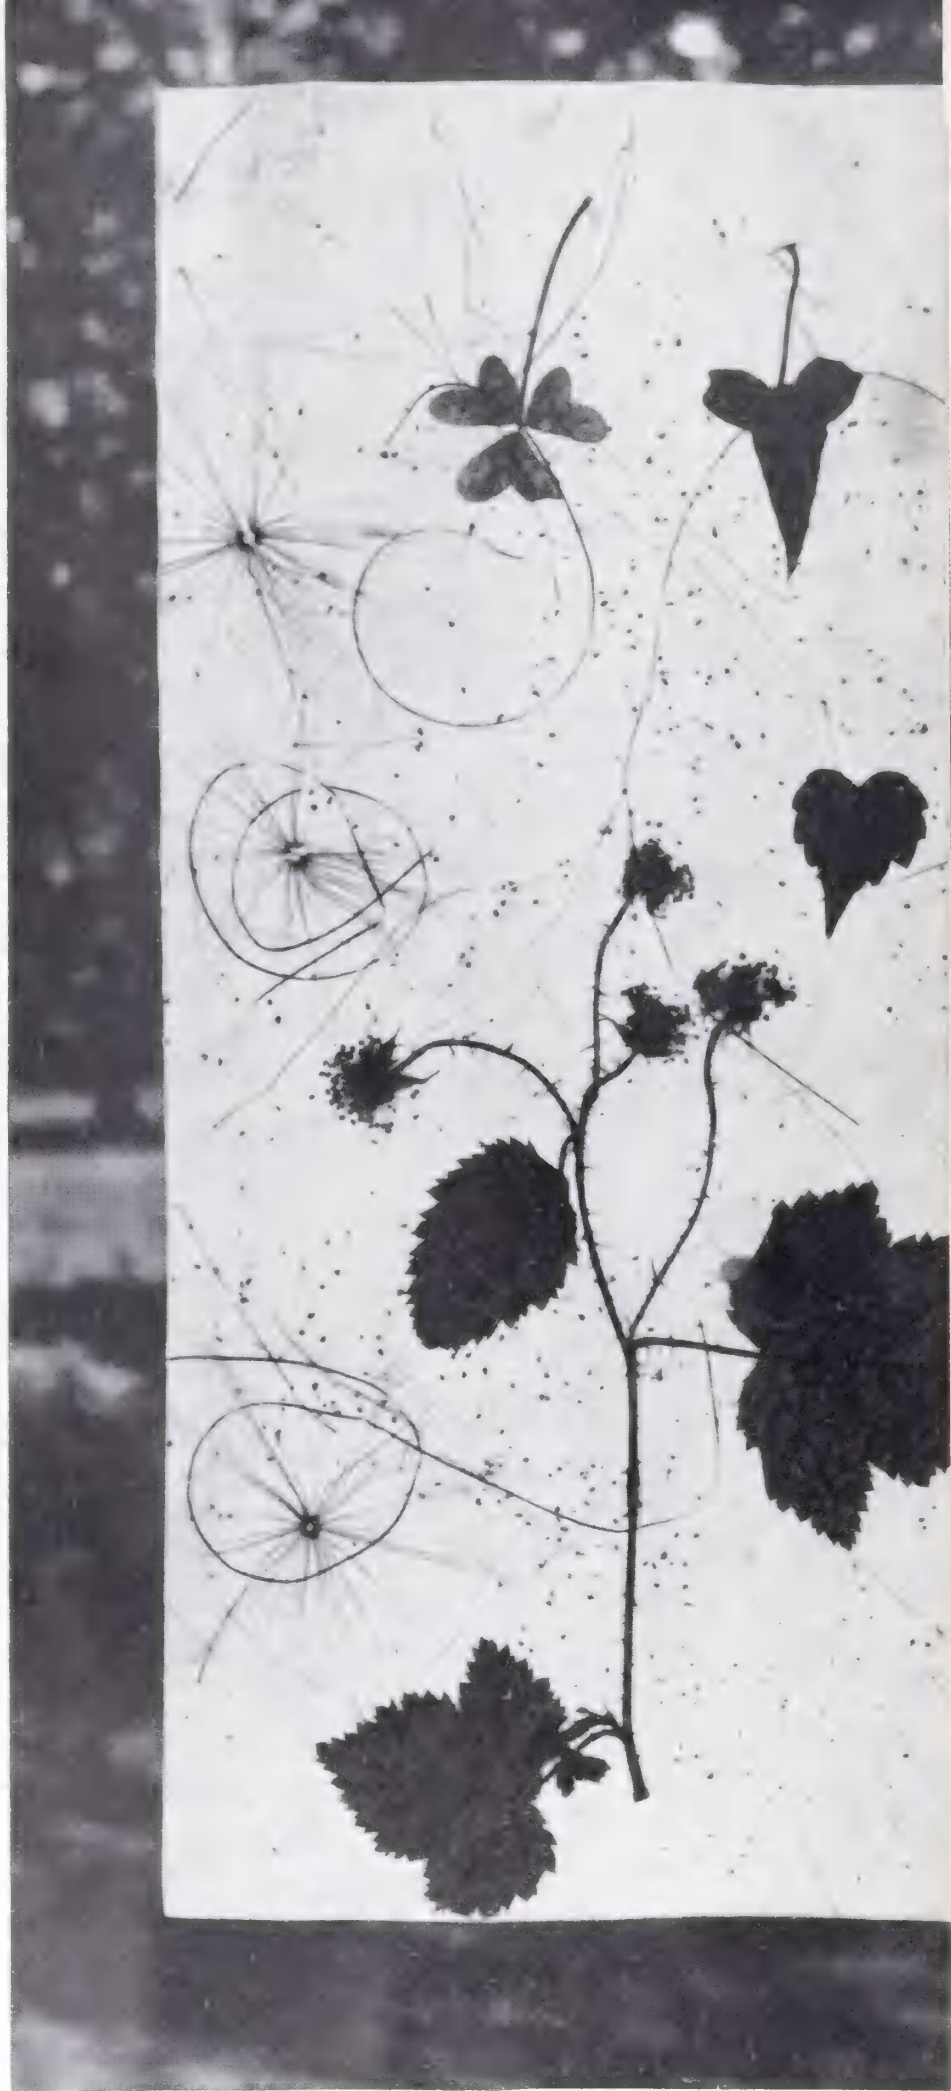

Fourth wall of bedroom repeats the simple black-and-white color scheme. The carpet is salt-and-pepper cotton tweed. Long-lasting magnolia leaves on the chest have been soaked in glycerine for three weeks until they have turned a mottled bronze. An application of shoe dye and black shoe polish followed. Leaves are wired onto branch lasting months.

Women are bringing new arts and crafts into being. Some are arrived at out of the blue, via the trial-and-error method. Others are converted industrial products for home application. TIETGENS

How I make "Japanese" paper

Nothing is simpler: You arrange leaves on unwaxed side of waxed paper, holding larger leaves with diluted glue.

Then cover leaf arrangement with overlapping sections of facial tissue, pressing glue through tissue with brush.

If you know Japanese rice papers, you'll know where I borrowed the idea of making paper with leaves embedded in it. They embed leaves and ferns in rice paper. I laminate between papers out of regular household supplies. The leaves were free, so I spent money only for a jar of white glue.

The resulting paper is thin and translucent but strong and tough. I think it is extremely decorative, and it is suitable for making lamp shades, screens and room dividers or for papering a glass window pane. These papers are most effective when seen with light coming through them. (Light coming through paper has a special glowing, translucent quality.) A papered window will protect your privacy without excluding light, will reduce glare or shut out a dreary view.

To make a sample sheet of this decorative paper, you will need a piece of waxed paper, a sheet or two of white facial tissue, a jar of "white" glue (Flexbond, Elmer's Glue-All, etc.), and, of course, a few dried, pressed leaves.

Begin by diluting a few teaspoons of the thick white glue, which is about the consistency of heavy cream, to the consistency of milk by adding cold water. Then arrange leaves on the unwaxed side of the waxed paper. Put a dab of glue under larger leaves. Small leaves or grasses can rest directly on the dry paper. Cover a section of leaf arrangement with a piece of tissue torn and cut from a single thickness and glue it down by pressing glue through the tissue with the stencil brush. This is used with a patting, up-and-down motion—not a side-wise brushing stroke—and this pushes the glue through the highly absorbent tissue. It also taps out larger wrinkles—some small wrinkles are inevitable, but they shrink and dry to give a frosted effect to the finished paper.

Continue covering sections of your leaf arrangement, overlapping tissue sections at edges, until waxed paper is covered with a single thickness of tissue. Tissue tears easily when torn in the direction of the fold but should be cut with scissors across the grain instead of being torn.

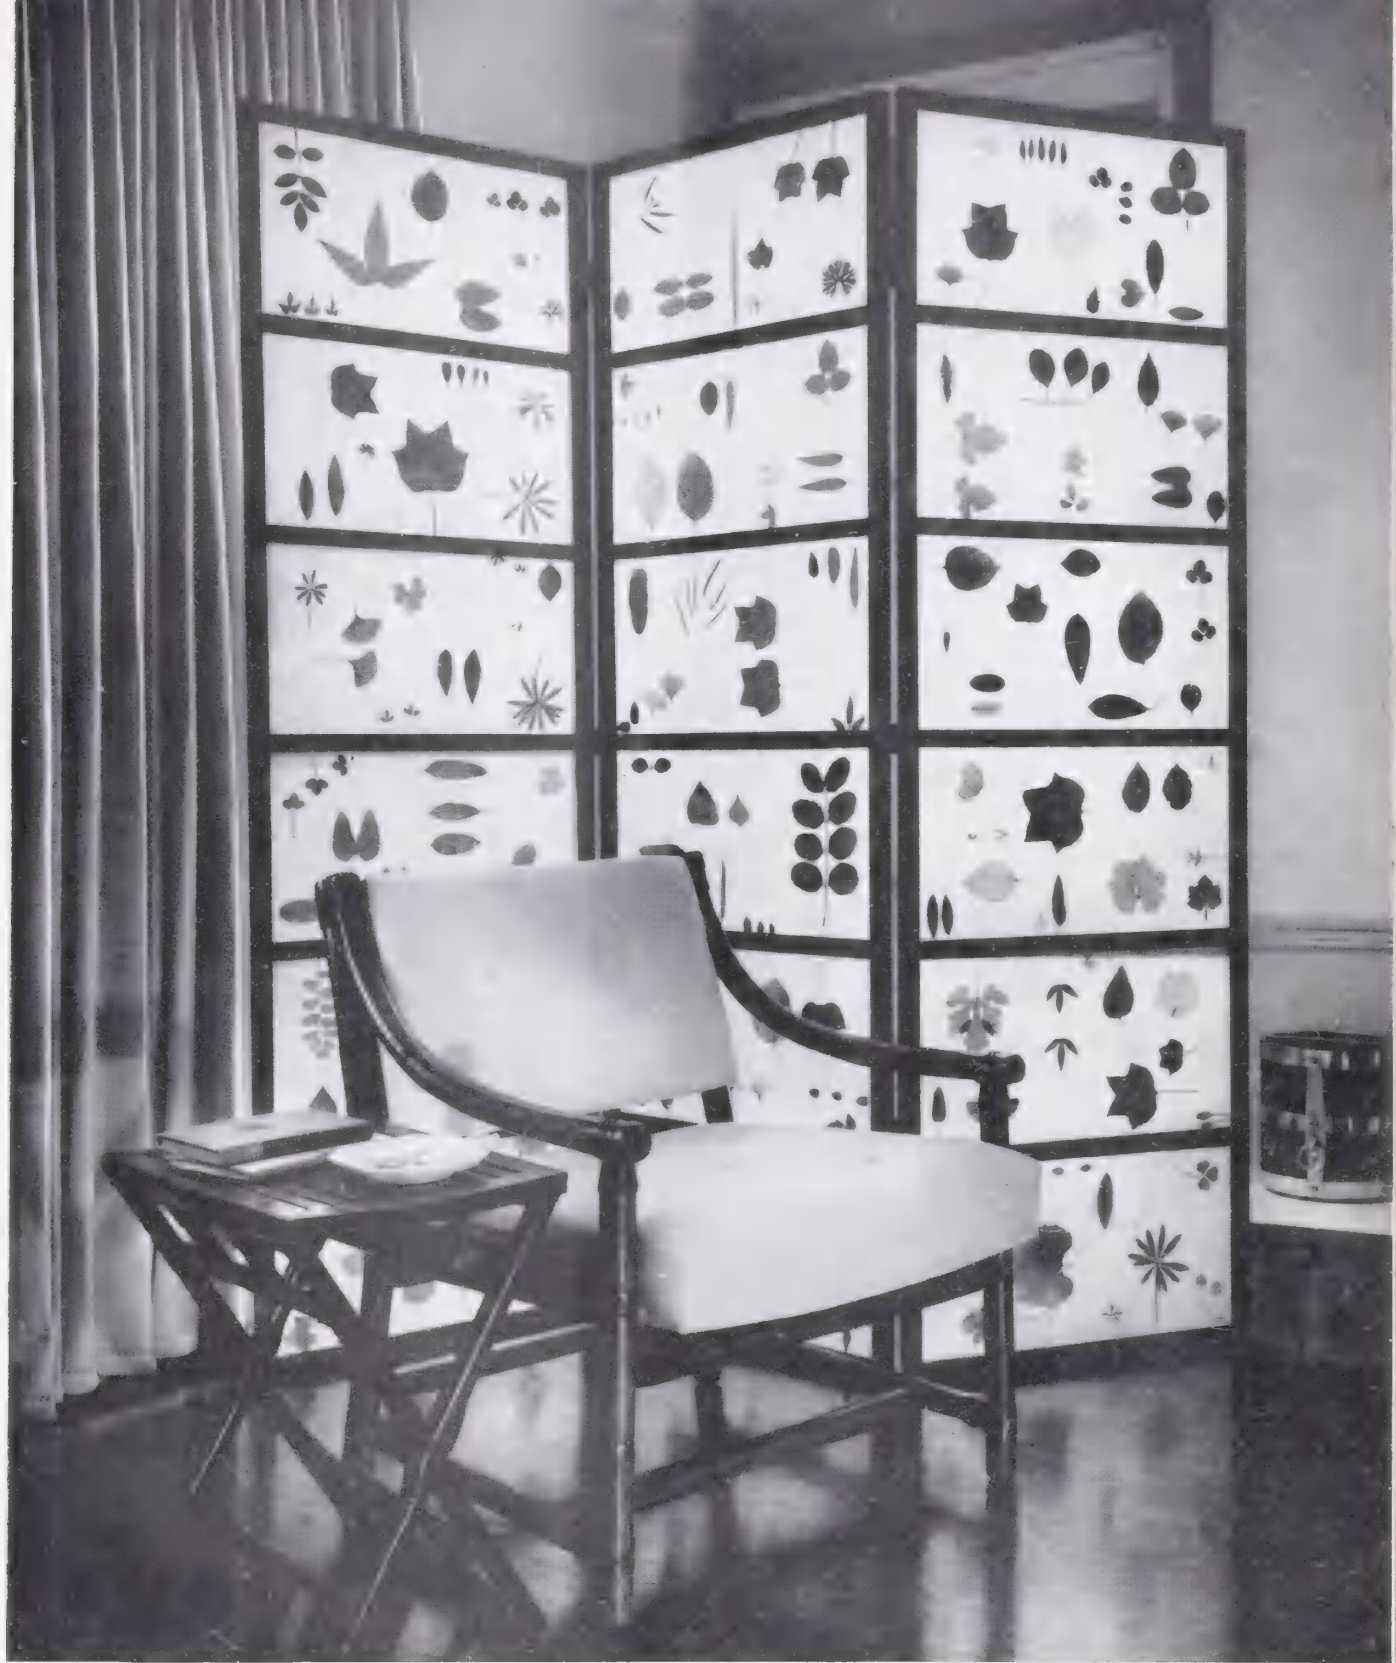

When the glue on your decorated paper is dry, press both sides with a warm iron and put it under a pile of books or magazines for a day or two.

If you plan to make large sheets of decorated paper for lamp shades, room dividers or screens buy a continuous roll of freezer meat-wrapping paper. This is a fine, strong white kraft paper with a waxed backing. Smaller sheets can be made on ordinary kitchen waxed paper—the glue seems to take to this very nicely—and is even more transparent than the kraft paper.

Prepare for a large project by making and pressing a generous collection of leaves—they will dry sufficiently for this purpose in only a few days if placed between sheets of newspaper and weighted down. Some leaves need only be pressed under a warm iron—this works better with leaves already fallen and partly dry than it does with juicy green ones. Don't limit yourself to leaves, however: try grasses, ferns, flowers, weed seeds, thistle down and cattail fluff. Try additions of "glitter" in gold, silver or colors and snips of colored sewing threads or colored confetti. There is no end of materials for embedding.

Leaves and tissue may also be applied directly to the glass panes of windows or doors or for framing as a picture. Just hold leaf on glass with a section of tissue over it and glue it down with stencil brush. Exact arrangement spacing can be indicated with a china pencil on back of the glass if desired.

MAYNARD PARKER

Decorative papers can be made for single window panes, lamp shades or for more important projects, for example shoji-like screens used as room dividers, as in the above by Doris Aller.

There is a fine purpose as well as an attractive pattern in these papers. They achieve privacy without darkening a room, cut glare or a dreary view, while enhancing entering daylight.

For large projects you use a continuous roll of freezer meat-wrapping paper, but apply exactly the same procedure as for smaller ones. Materials other than leaves might also be used here.

JEAN SEIDENBERG

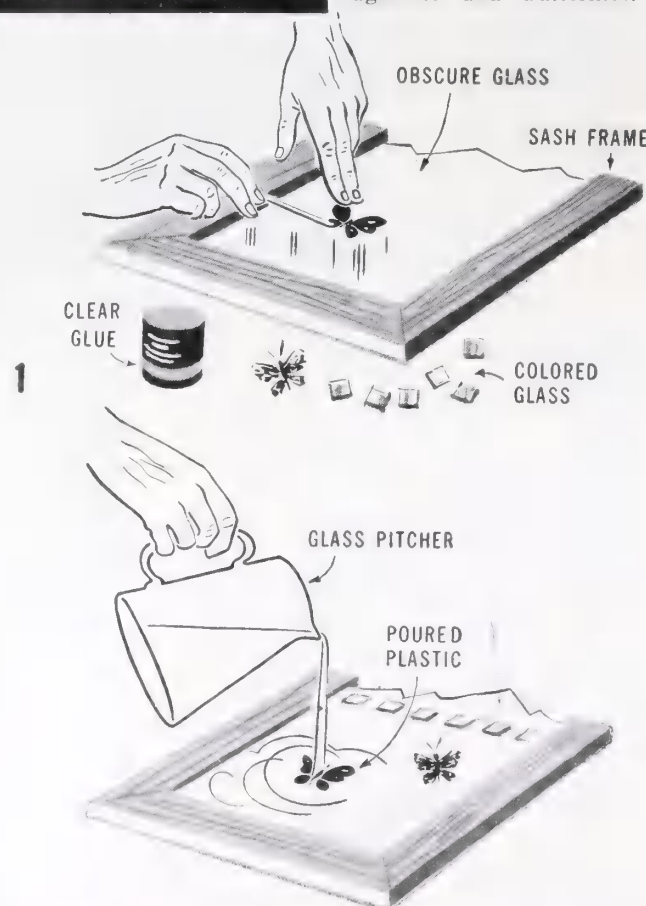

"At the window of our bath we created a light-filtering, moisture-proof privacy screen by pouring plastic over our own composition of glass fragments and butterflies."

How we pour plastic

By BEULAH TEASDALE

When we were building our house, our architect, Al Ledner, showed us a beautiful, crystal-like lantern, molded in plastic, that he had made as an experiment. We liked it so much that, with Al's help and guidance, we made light fixtures for our whole house and a translucent window screen for one of the bathrooms. We did it all with a liquid plastic called "Polylite 3001," which you pour to make a casting.

One of our needs was for a moisture-proof privacy screen at the window of a bath, one that would be beautiful both from the interior and exterior. So our cabinet shop made the wood frames (12" wide and 48" high) and glazed them with obscure glass, in the same way they make a window sash, but smaller in scale. We fastened the panels together with brass piano hinges, then laid the assembled screen flat on the floor and composed the over-all design, using small rectangles and squares of commercial colored glass, glass chips and butterflies. Each piece (see Figure 1) was temporarily glued in place with clear auto glass sealer to hold it until the "Polylite 8001" could be poured over each of the panels (see Figure 2).

"Lights in our lanterns set shadows dancing on the ceilings with the crystal-like pattern of the broken-glass plastic."

The plastic layer was poured to only the thickness necessary to cover the bits of glass and butterflies—about a quarter of an inch. To get a good bond between the glass and the plastic, turn the patterned face of the obscure glass toward the design and thoroughly clean it, so the plastic will adhere. We used a glass with a pattern of small ridges running in both directions called "Fac-trolite," which produced a good bond; a smoother glass will not make such a good bond.

Doing the light fixtures required more "get-ready" time, getting molds made, and so on. But once ready, we could really go into production. The effects we've achieved are quite artistic and look fine.

Here's how we went about the lantern making. The local cabinet shop made us a plywood block which we used as the base for our casting mold. Two circular grooves (one  $5\frac{1}{2}$ " the other  $7\frac{1}{2}$ " in diameter; both  $\frac{1}{2}$ " deep) were cut into this base and shallow indentations cut just inside the smaller groove to hold bent screw eyes during the casting process. The screw portions of the screw eyes were thus cast securely into the walls of the lantern leaving the eyes or loops exposed inside (Please turn to page 114)

It's fun to discover objects like these, unrelated in origin, yet boon companions when you put them together in a table setting.

The playful possibilities of setting a table

Swedish

Chinese

Italian

Belgian

Japanese

Of all the burgeoning womanly arts, perhaps the most enriching is the making of beautiful and original table settings. Women are forgetting the conventional "musts," eschewing the matched sets and the dusty dicta of the etiquette books. They are looking at each object they see as a potential component of a daydream table which they compose in their mind's eye, bringing together in a dinner-table composition odd and beautiful bits from all over the world, from all kinds of untraditional sources.

Some happy results of such discovery are shown in these six pages of tables by Alexander and Susan Girard, skillful performers in this art of artistic playfulness. They are collectors with a practical purpose. Recently they were invited by Georg Jensen to create these exhibition settings in that store's New York shop. (Please turn the next page)

The whole world is your "china cupboard" when you look at all you see with a table setting picture in mind. Note surprising unity of this setting from Japan, Italy, Belgium, Sweden, and China.

With merry playfulness Girard created this anniversary dinner setting, mixing Viennese enamel bowls with old Russian plates, Venini glass with place mats of his own design, and a medley of flatware patterns with Norwegian enamel spoon.

Breakfast, an everyday affair, can be a changeable feast, if you feel free to let yourself go lightheartedly with your adventurous gleanings. Here it's a giddy, cosmopolitan union of Dutch pewter coffee pot, Swedish Gustavsberg stoneware sugar bowl, Japanese lacquer, and cocktail glasses inverted as egg cups. All it takes is imaginative courage to enjoy the fun of fine Jensen silverware alongside Mexican pottery trinkets on a cloth of upholstery fabric

A dinner party for two happy couples, as Mr. Girard sees it (opposite), is a clear, bright matter of a rose at every place in an amusing Gustavsberg vase, a giddily contrived centerpiece of wood, wire, vigil lights and toy doves (his own creation, as are the eye-bemusing dinner plates which he has designed for Georg Jensen). The red lacquer-handled Siamese cutlery is from the Girards' almost inexhaustible collection of bright discoveries.

Never was a buffet table more beguiling or less traditional than this unabashed potpourri of Danish stainless-steel flatware and casseroles. Dutch ovenware plates, French earthenware marmite, and Italian glass decanters are all the height of practicality. The fabulous spice chest, as useful as a butler, serves breadsticks, cigarettes, nuts, and oddments—a gladsome gimmick of Girard invention, brightened by a pattern of can covers.

Let the spirit of the occasion set the pace for table settings. Family lunch after summer morning's sailing is as crisp and nautical and Danish as the ice-cold beer, stage-set with teak-handled stainless steel, enamel bowls, and faience hors d'oeuvres dishes used as bread and butter plates.

Play to the capacity of your audience's appreciation. Once you sense the fun and adventure and, indeed, the creative satisfaction of this new art, every gift you receive, every trip you take, every stroll past a shop window becomes an exciting exploration. A black Japanese lacquer bowl might be the spark of an idea. A white Limoges plate may suggest itself as a good companion, and before you know it your eye will discover the happy affinity of Mexican black pottery birds or black nylon-handled silver or black plastic plates. You're off on an endless voyage of discovery, until with precious bits and pieces of unexpectedly appropriate objects, you have the rich makings of not one but many possible combinations. You never know where you'll find the treasure that will synchronize with the scheme you're building until you come upon it: whether it is a toy, a seashell, a chemist's porcelain beaker.

This is lively, purposeful collecting. It's not for collecting's sake, but rather for how the texture or shape or color of each object will combine with something else. So your collecting, diverse though it may be, has a plan behind it, and so develops a unity—a unity of your taste and your personality.

Do you doubt your own artistry at mixing and matching? Are you afraid you'll make mistakes? Well, possibly you may. So what? Table arrangements are fleeting. They don't last long, and each meal presents a new opportunity to create a fresh and lovelier table. You have nothing to lose!

There are few dull moments for anyone who acquires this habit of delicious discovery, for your eye becomes accustomed to looking at everything in a new and promising light. You are meanwhile training your eye to evaluate form and pattern. And no matter what you choose, it all adds up to a unity of your own taste, freely expressed.

More details about these table settings on page 113

Once you have mentally snapped your fingers at stuffy table-setting dogma, the only rules you need to remember are common sense and appropriateness. Collecting this way, anything goes almost literally, for you may find your inspiration in nature forms—stones, driftwood, fossilized wood, shells, ad infinitum—as well as in man-made objects.

The 20 best vegetable recipes

we've published before. Others are brand new. All are great.*

Vegetables are gaining more importance on my culinary horizon all the time. Perhaps I am becoming more aware of their goodness. Or perhaps I am getting more skillful at giving each its proper handling so its unique goodness comes out.

I use vegetables three different ways in menu-making. There are certain vegetables that shine more brilliantly in each of the three categories, and I will give you a list of them as I use them.

In the summer, when vegetables are plentiful and at their peak of goodness, I serve one all alone as a first course. The important-looking vegetables are the best to serve this way. Eye appeal and the quality of importance make me prefer these for first course purposes: corn on the cob, artichokes, asparagus, whole string beans, peas in the pod, mushrooms and even a huge cauliflower. They all have character and can be made dramatic, as I will presently explain.

When a vegetable is absolutely at its peak of perfection, it deserves to be tasted alone, without the distraction of other foods to divert your attention from its excellence. European countries have long known this: the French, the Finns, the Italians, for instance. These countries handle fine vegetables with such respect for their intrinsic nature, cooking and seasoning with such understanding and imagination, that they succeed spectacularly as a first course. And we can do it, too.

For vegetables to accompany the meat course, I use the following: For roasts of beef and steaks, I use leeks, broiled tomatoes, beets, broccoli and mushrooms. For fish, I use potatoes cooked with dill, spinach, carrots, peas, string beans. A rice pilaff is also very good with fish. With chicken, I like to serve carrots, squash, string beans, peas or a rice pilaff.

You want to take into consideration the color and texture of the vegetable as it composes with the fish or fowl. The stronger the meat dish, the more rugged you can have the vegetable. The more delicate (as with a delicate sole), the more delicate the vegetable. For you do not want to overshadow the meat with a strong-flavored vegetable. The two must "marry well."

The third way I use vegetables is as a salad—cooked vegetables, that is, I don't mean mixed up with other vegetables, either. Broccoli is delicious with a zesty salad dressing and looks so attractive, too, if you keep the stalks fairly long and unbroken. Celery remoulade is delicious (recipe later), as is asparagus, whole baby string beans, cold artichokes that have been highly reseasoned, celery Victor. One of my best recipes for vegetable salad dressing is given later. I also use a classic vinaigrette for a cold vegetable salad.

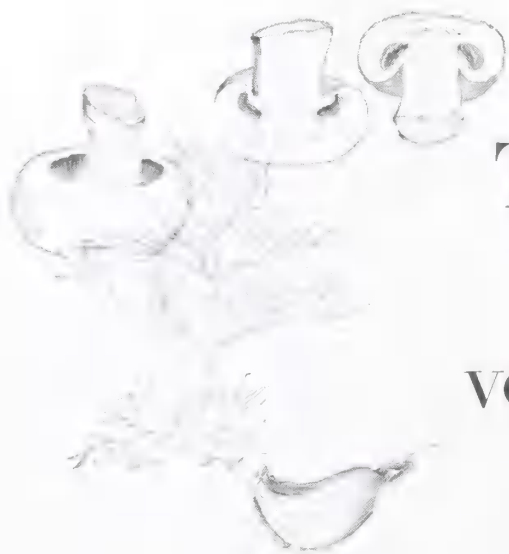

The care and selection of your vegetables are of the utmost importance for the best final result. Don't plan your menu until you see what vegetables are at their best in the market. Select crispy, perky, colorful vegetables. Never buy a limp, tired one, for you cannot rejuvenate it; it has lost its flavor and some of the vitamins. And never soak vegetables in water; this is death. So many vitamins are water soluble.

I really take time in picking out my vegetables, since I want them uniform in size. This is crucial to cooking success. I like to shop in the super market, where I can take as much time as I please and hand-pick to get uniform sizes. For instance, with asparagus, I try to pick out the tiniest in the box: they are often the cheapest and the sweetest. This means that they will all be done at the same time, for they are all the same size. The tiniest are also the most glamorous-looking of them all.

After I get the vegetables home, I wash them with great attention. If a stiff vegetable brush does not remove all the dirt, then I use a stainless steel sponge (made by Gottschalk Metal Sponge, 3650 No. Tenth Street, Philadelphia 40, Pa.) I never peel a vegetable unless it is absolutely necessary; there is so much goodness in and (Please turn the page) near the surface. Store them in refrigerator boxes, in nylon bags or in foil wrap in the refrigerator; you want to keep them crispy and colorful until ready to use.

I have three methods of vegetable cookery. The first is the most revolutionary, but it is so simple that I don't understand why everyone doesn't cook them as I do. Most of my vegetables are cooked in a tightly-covered frying pan. A few are done in the oven or in a big kettle.

Now, don't say, "Why, I cook mine that way too," until you really read how I do mine.

When the vegetables are done in the frying pan, little or no water is used, and this is an important basic principle. Thus, none of the flavor, vitamins or minerals is leached out into the cooking water to go down the drain.

You may ask, "How can it be almost waterless? Doesn't the vegetable burn or dry up?"

I can simplify the principles very easily, even though I give you recipes later on.

1. I use very little water or none at all, depending on how watery the vegetable itself is. If I add no water, I use a few lettuce leaves, which have been held under the cold water faucet to pick up a few more drops of moisture. The heat brings out the moisture in the lettuce and creates the necessary steam. Whether you add lettuce or water, your object should be to end the cooking period with no water at all in the pan.

You need to realize that the larger the pan, the more evenly the heat is distributed. In a deep saucepan the vegetables touching the outside of the pan cook first, leaving the middle cold, so there is a great unevenness in the cooking time. With the vegetables all spread out in a big frying pan, they all cook in an equal amount of time, arriving at the tender, delicious stage simultaneously. You don't need to stir them or break them up to distribute the heat.

Don't overload the pan. It is better to use two frying pans and have the vegetables laid in with care and affection and not packed tightly. No steam must escape from the lid, which means the lid must be a perfect fit.

This frying pan method aids you in getting each morsel almost done, which is to say about 98 per cent done, rather than overdone. A crispy-textured vegetable is far more appetizing than one sagging and limp. (Going on this same premise, I would rather have my guests wait for the vegetable than the vegetable wait for the guests. This is another reason I like to feature a vegetable as a first course, for I can control the timing better than if it accompanies the meat course.)

2. The uniform sizing of the pieces of vegetable is another crucial point. They must be cut, sliced, chopped or broken into pieces of equal size, so they will cook evenly and arrive at the done point at the same moment. For instance, with broccoli I use either one of two ways. I may break up the head of bloom into equal-size pieces. Or, if I want to keep it together to serve as long strips with stemmed flowerettes still intact, I slice it vertically along the stem toward the flower in several slices. This way I can lay equal-size strips in the frying pan. If the stem part is still thick, I make a few additional slits in the stem to help heat to penetrate.

3. I use some butter or olive oil in the frying pan as a medium of cooking, rather than adding it later as a seasoning. The more seasoning you put in during cooking, the more tasty the result. The French, Italians and Chinese have long known the value of butter or vegetable oil in enhancing the natural flavor of the vegetable. Why shouldn't we?

(And both the French and Chinese go to any lengths to get the pieces uniform in size, come to think about it!)

I have a few pet theories that I practice all the time. Don't be too flabbergasted by them or think "that crazy mixed-up gal"! They really work. I never peel anything, unless it is absolutely necessary. I never use water, unless it is absolutely necessary. I never salt during cooking.

For instance, in cooking lima beans and fresh garden peas, I cook them in their pods. Lima beans are a pesky thing to shell, it takes time and frays my nerves. I take pods and all, rinse them off, put them in a frying pan and cook them in enough water (about a cup) to prevent their sticking to the pan, and cook them 25 minutes. You have never eaten such a delicious lima! The pods come off with ease, with no fuss or feathers, and you reheat the beans in cream or butter and there you have a dish! Definitely the pods add to the flavor.

Fresh garden peas, cooked my way and served as a first course, are a definite conversation item. Cook them the same way as the lima beans—in the pod—for only 15 minutes (or until tender, depending upon their age), and serve them, as you do asparagus, with melted butter. Your guests may not know how to eat them, unless they have been to Finland, but they are a rare treat. You dip the pod in the melted butter, put it in your mouth holding the stem end, then pull it out slowly with your teeth nearly closed. This allows the tough stringy part to be discarded, and gives you a sweetness and delicacy of flavor you wouldn't believe. And it is such fun to eat them this way!

Any of the winter hard-shelled squash goes into my oven whole. True, it takes longer, but the juiciness and sweetness are great rewards. When you open the squash, scrape out the seeds, cut into serving portions, add melted butter, a little salt, some pepper and a dash of grated nutmeg. You'll have a treat.

I believe that nature imparts goodness to all parts of the vegetable and we should try and retain it. I cook the tender little leaves of the cauliflower and, when using frozen peas, I put a handful of fresh peas in the pod in the frying pan to get that added pod flavor.

Also I consider M.S.G. (Monosodium Glutamate) a "must" seasoning for many of the mild-flavored vegetables. You can add your pet flavors, shallots, green onions, garlic, mint, rosemary, etc. at the beginning. And, remember, it is better to undercook than overcook. The Orientals all cook their vegetables very lightly. The crunchiness and thin slices are a delight. Even carrots can become a sensational vegetable cooked in this way, with fresh tarragon and cream flung over them just before serving.

Actually, I believe the French started the lettuce-leaf idea; their peas à la bonne femme, when cooked with lettuce, small onions and sugar are a dream.

Peas à la Bonne Femme

2 packages of frozen peas
 1/4 pound fresh peas (pods and all)
 1 small head Boston lettuce, or 1/4 head lettuce broken in chunks
 2 green onions chopped
 1 teaspoon sugar
 1 teaspoon M.S.G.
 2 tablespoons butter
 2 tablespoons chopped parsley
 2 tablespoons chopped chives
 1/8 teaspoon Spice Islands Java Cracked pepper
 1 bay leaf (optional)
 4 tablespoons butter, added last

Into a frying pan put the lettuce, chopped green onions, sugar, butter, M.S.G., pepper and bay leaf. Also the pods of fresh peas. When you take the frozen peas out of the freezer, take a wooden mallet and pound the box without breaking the paper. I do all my frozen vegetables this way and it works like a charm, for each piece is separate and so cooks evenly. I stand the carton on end and give it a resounding whack, then I turn it and whack the long side of the box, then the other end and so on around and around until the peas are all broken apart. After you have finished, the box will be well squashed and out of shape. If you happen to whack it too hard and the paper breaks, the box comes apart and whee!—you have peas all over the kitchen. But with practice you will be able to get the "feel" of it and get your vegetable from freezer to frying pan fast.

Arrange the peas evenly in the pan, put on the lid and bring to a quick boil. Turn off the heat (I use electricity) and allow to steam one minute. If you use gas, after it has come to a boil (you can tell by feeling the cover and hearing it; also, some steam may escape), turn down the heat as low as possible and steam one minute. Add more butter, chopped chives and parsley. Dish in a hot server and serve at once. Don't ruin yours by allowing it to sit for ages before serving. Serves eight.

String Beans

I allow two pounds for eight, if they are to be Frenched and served as a vegetable with the meat. But, if served by themselves as a first course, order three pounds for eight.

2 tablespoons butter
 1/4 teaspoon sugar
 1/2 teaspoon M.S.G.
 1/4 teaspoon Spice Islands Beau Monde Seasoning
 1 green onion, chopped
 1/2 cup water

If you want to serve them as a first course, leave whole. The cooking time is 25 minutes. After they reach the boiling point, turn heat to low. If you run them through the "Beanex" (that gadget that strings and Frenches them all in one maneuver), then cook eight minutes.

I would use two frying pans for the beans for eight, as there is that old element of time again. The fewer in the pan, the quicker they cook and the better they taste. Bring to a quick boil, turn heat to low, etc. If you do use two pans, use half the amount of seasoning given above for one pan and then the same amount for the second pan. The only difference is to change the amount of water to a third of a cup for each pan. For added flavor, add two tablespoons chopped chives and chopped crispy bacon. Another herb that enhances string beans is thyme. A rounded quarter teaspoon, well mashed in your hands, can be added at the last minute when you add the chives. Fresh thyme is preferable. Use twice as much as the dried. Serves eight. You have never really enjoyed beets until you try them my way:

Beets in Butter

10 to 12 medium beets
 1/4 teaspoon sugar (unless beets were just picked from your garden)
 3 tablespoons butter
 1 teaspoon M.S.G.
 1 tablespoon chopped chives or parsley
 2 large lettuce leaves

Peel the beets. Then slice thinly or julienne them with one of those little tools you use for making french-fried potatoes. Put butter in frying pan, add sugar, M.S.G., then the beets and the two lettuce leaves dripping with water. Run the leaves under the faucet and immediately spread out carefully over the beets while the lettuce is still dripping. Cover and cook over low heat 25 minutes. Remove the lettuce leaves. Salt to taste and add a few twists of pepper, sprinkle on the chives and/or parsley, mix well and serve immediately in a hot serving dish. They are a beautiful red and delicious. Serves eight.

Carrots with Herbs

2 bunches small carrots
 2 tablespoons butter
 1/4 teaspoon sugar
 1/2 teaspoon M.S.G.
 2 tablespoons chopped parsley
 1 tablespoon chopped tarragon
 1/4 teaspoon salt
 1/8 teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper
 2 tablespoons heavy cream
 2 lettuce leaves

Nothing tops bicycling for family fun

Running a family is a lot more than feeding them and keeping them clean. It's also creating group fun

By DOROTHEA WALKER

During the gasoline shortage of World War II, my husband and I bought bicycles. On our Sunday cruises and week-end tours, we found relaxation in a new closeness to the outdoors. We found out how to be participants in the landscape, not just onlookers. From our bicycle seats we missed nothing at all. Coming onto a field of wildflowers, we put one foot on the ground, leaned on our handle-bars and stared our fill.

Now that we have five children, we've found still more reason for our bicycling enthusiasm. Cycling has proved to be an outdoor sport with special advantages as a family pursuit. A family on bikes is a family meeting on common ground. We all share the satisfaction of motion created by our own energy. We all participate in the pleasure of getting closer to nature, when your senses come awake to sun, shade, the smell of the wind, the patterns of the leaves that crunch under your wheels. These are pleasures that speak to all ages, and they are the pleasures a family shares through cycling together, as we seven have found.

A family on bicycles has a common meeting ground. All ages feel the satisfaction of moving under their own motive power.

On bike cruises frequent snacks are fun and keep energy level up. Food need not be carried; we buy it at road-side stores.

It is not easy to find a sport in which family participation can be on any sort of equal basis. The age-spread in family groups represents such a variation in strength, skill and muscular co-ordination that younger members are usually hopelessly outclassed. But biking-strength has nothing to do with your age; young and not-so-young can each enjoy it.

Muscle tone and mental push are both factors in cycling output, and so are the relative weights of the rider and his bicycle. Pedaling skill, excellence of equipment, intelligent use of gears, all play their part. (Please turn to page 107)

Streamlining the Art of Quilting

You can whip up something quite out of the ordinary in no time flat, if you free your mind and learn a few speedy embroidery stitches

Quite by chance I stumbled onto the pleasures of quilting. Thank goodness I did, because it has been both a pleasure and an emotional therapy for ten years.

While recovering from an illness, I was casting about for something to occupy my unaccustomed leisure. I bought one of those "packaged quilts"—precut, prestamped, complete with threads, and the like. It seemed like a suitable occupation for a convalescent, needing no thought and only a witless putting in of stitches.

I soon quit the project in disgust, because it was so ugly and without taste—in the design or the quality of the fabrics. So I embarked instead on a project of my own concocting. And I've been quilting ever since.

Dozens of quilts later, I can report that quilting is one of the most satisfactory things a woman can do with her little bits of leisure time.

Even though you may be slow to admit it, you have the ability and the time. All you need is two heaping tablespoons of imagination, a brimming cupful of enthusiasm and a dash of courage to convince yourself that you can whip up something very much out of the ordinary. The first quilt will be all the proof you need that you can do it as well as anybody.

The medium in which you will be working is not exhausting or at all exasperating. In fact, it is (Please turn to page 112)

At the first hint of Christmas, young Kathy Beam gets her Christmas Tree quilt. Taking this pillow-size appliqué to bed with her during the holidays is as important as hanging up her stocking.

A wonderful Christmas holiday spent in New York is recorded by this appliquéd quilt. The falling snow is mere ball fringe. The many façades of Fifth Avenue buildings are suggested by a variety of fabric textures and colors. Any trip is an excuse for a story quilt.

A "learning" quilt like this is a real inducement to the pre-school child to master her numerals. In those last moments before sleep, she can read from 1 to 10 in large yellow appliqué; from 1 to 100 in stitches around the border; and on the blue center panel she'll have row after row of stitched roman numerals from 1 to 10. The youth-bed size of most of Kathy's quilts adapts itself to any setting, as here in the Herman Miller showroom.

This red, green and white alphabet quilt is made of washable seersucker. The underside is covered in a gay red and white stripe. Each white letter is outlined with green fabric and big black stitching. There's no need for dainty little stitches on this quilt. Both of these "learning" quilts were turned to face the camera, but they should face the child for easiest reading.

Streamlining the Art of Quilting

1 The Mexican child's favorite person is the man who carries the toy tree. This quilt tree is full of bird cages. Each cage required three appliques—the background, bird, and grille. Fabrics include braid, rick-rack, bias tape, cotton huck, wool yarn, Mexican cotton.

2 This quilt recording the birth of Kathy Beam is really a modern day sampler. Her first baby blanket was used as the background for the angel playing the lute. On the scroll, written in ribbon, is her name, birthdate, birthplace. The raised applique gives feeling of depth.

3 The birthday jack-in-the-box is all done up in upholstery fabric. He is gayly trimmed with sequins, buttons, lace yardage, velvet ribbon and cotton doilies. The story theme for a quilt needn't be for a child; adults have special occasions and fond memories, too.

4 The wonderful old folk song, "The Twelve Days of Christmas," is freely interpreted with 12 branches of upholstery fringe, and silk, taffeta and velvet ribbons. Brown corduroy base fabric is framed with wide, gray grosgrain ribbon. Photographed at Manor House.

5 This "fun horoscope" is one of Kathy's favorites. It dates her birthdate and hour. The three hearts are Mommy, Daddy and Baby. And to insure good luck she has a four-leaf clover, a horse-shoe and a wishbone! All the fabrics in this quilt were hand-dyed.

6 Instead of the typical carriage cover, Mrs. Beam designed this little quilt of hearts. She later discovered that they were appreciated as gifts to friends with new babies. Some quilts are inscribed "We love you"; could also have baby's name and birthday.

How to work embroidery into your decorating

Two new slipcover fabrics designed by a famous embroiderer, Mariska Karasz, can be the jumping-off point for you to personalize the rest of your furnishings

You can give an individual look, which you can't buy, to your decorating with touches of your needlework. It's a "natural" to embroider—in the real—motifs taken from a print originally derived from embroidery. The hand print, used here to slipcover a day bed and stool tops, retains so realistically the dimensions of the embroidery of the original art piece that it was fun to work similar designs onto ready-made net curtains and to put single motifs from it on linen napkins. For the linen pillow covers, blow-ups of individual blocks of the print were translated back into actual embroidery and show in enlarged detail the amusing mesh of the original wall hanging by Karasz.

For more about this print, as well as another Karasz-inspired hand-printed fabric by Schumacher, and for instructions in using the chain stitch, the couching (anchoring) stitch, the detached buttonhole stitch employed in these embroideries, please turn to page 116.

Summer slipcovers should be cool, serviceable and washable. Covers on day bed and tops of stools (left) are printed from Karasz's original design, "Fair and Square," on sail cloth from Schumacher. Fabric "places" well on large or small areas, comes in five sprightly color ways.

These embroidery motifs inspired by the print fabric were hand-stitched with water-fast yarns onto linen napkins, in random groups, to decorate white cotton and Lurex-flecked curtains. Notice how faithfully pillow covers repeat specific designs of the printed fabric.

WHO COOKS FOR A LIVING

By ROSA,
MARQUESA DE CASTELLAR

Dear Miss Gordon:

You asked me a few days ago in Cuernavaca [Mexico] how I find time to cook and sew and embroider and garden and raise chickens and ducks. I had not thought about it much until you asked the question, for these pleasurable activities come naturally. Since then I have tried to find some answers for you and also for myself.

Pride of home is, I think, my first reason. Today home is a woman's castle. During the time that man worked at home, it was his; but today his castle is at his office. The home is now woman's, almost to herself.

A very old Spanish proverb says: El hombre para guerrear; la mujer para cuidar al guerrero. (Man is for warring; woman for the comfort of the warrior.) Man's war today is so to earn that he can meet his responsibilities—wife, children, cat and canary. Since man now spends so little of his time in his home, it seems to me more important than ever before that woman shall make it such a refuge of comfort that her warrior can find new strength there after his struggle. Like Antaeus, his strength must return to him from his own earth, his own hearth. Like Antaeus again, if removed from his earth, he withers. Hence the more his the home can be made, the more it belongs to the family, the stronger it will be as a haven of strength.

When I make something it is more mine than if I buy it. To embroider napkin-holders for the servants brings them more into the family, to which they contribute so much, than if I buy them. To buy the holders means nothing except that one has the money. It pleases me to make pot-holders of an old bath mat for myself and for gifts to friends. It pleases me to cut up old sheets and make inside pillow slips or laundry bags, which the children take to school and invariably lose there. And when I add a little embroidered figure or a name to an object, it is no longer only an object, but carries something of me.

The need for womanly self-reliance is, I think, my second reason. (Do we not accept without question the value of manly self-reliance? No less so, though necessarily different, is the virtue of womanly self-reliance.) Though my family was well-to-do by any standard, with country houses, farms and city property, my mother impressed on all of her children that they should always be able to take care of themselves. She meant this not only specially in terms of being able to get a meal, but also to be unbowed by catastrophes and to be independent of too complete reliance on servants or relatives or anyone else.

I learned to sew and embroider and cook at convent schools in Barcelona and Paris. And my mother's advice has been most useful, for in my own lifetime we Spaniards suffered, in addition to the two World Wars, a Civil War from 1936-1939.

I had lost my father when I was seven years old and my mother died when I was eighteen. My brothers and sister married. I decided to be independent. So, when I was twenty-two, I took a job as a social secretary to a lady in Paris and later joined the staff of the Spanish Embassy there.

Soon after I married and acquired five small step-children, the Civil War broke out. My husband's properties were seized and income stopped. It was a question of making do as best we could regarding the basic essentials—food and clothing. I thanked my stars for my training. On one occasion at a rummage sale, when we badly needed sheets, I bought some fine ones for a trifle. No one else wanted them, because each had a bad tear. By shortening the sheets a very little, I was able to make a patch; they were splendid thereafter.

My brothers had always looked to their kid sister to iron their best shirts: when we had no money for laundries, this was useful. My mother had despaired of my ever learning to cook, but the convent lessons in home economics had soaked in a little and as we wandered during the Spanish Civil War I learned more by practice. All in all, though often nearly destitute, we were independent. The experience has stood, for I now earn my living by cooking.

I must confess that whenever we took up a new residence, I insisted always on one first luxury—a sewing machine. With it we would always be clothed. I now own an Elna with some 20 attachments for different kinds of stitches and embroidery.

In the third place, plying the woman's arts gives me time to think. Hands have a wonderful way of remembering by themselves. Once hands have learned, their skills seem to improve without the help of attention.

I am quite serious in this. When I was a secretary, I was so tired on returning to my apartment that I had no wish to think: I had been thinking all day. But sewing and embroidering give me time to think how this child's grades might be improved by such-and-such; how that dish could be bettered; how a letter due a friend should be (Continued on page 109)

Do you need or simply want to be in bed many hours of the day? Have a job that can't be forsaken? Then by all means treat yourself to a table that reaches across your bed, one that is sturdy and steady even when you type. This one has drawer at end with mirror and reading rack, and operates from beneath table. Top is never disturbed for primping or getting at tissues or cosmetics. There's an easily reached crank for adjusting. Carrom table is shown at B. Altman & Company.

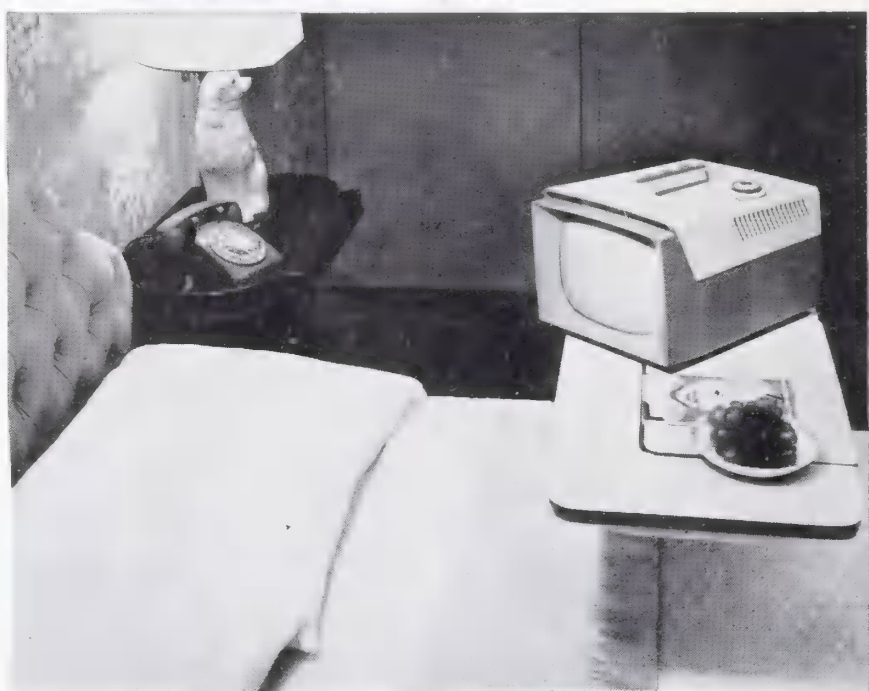

A chaise longue can pamper you when you don't want to rest in bed. Trim lines of this unusually long day-rest make it desirable for living or bedroom. It is a most comfortable spot for lazing or doing table work. Its companion table has Formica top, base of solid brass with casters for easy moving. It is counterbalanced to take weight of typewriter or portable TV. Ideal over almost any chair. Available from Valley Furniture Shops.

An over-bed table of the hospital variety should be standard equipment in every well appointed house. This table is invaluable not only for hours of enforced staying-in-bed, when such a table does much to restore your self-sufficiency, but for simply restful writing or night reading. Constructed for hospital duty with heat- and stain-resistant composition top, it has mirror with hinge arrangement for using in various positions, plus the usual storage tray. Keep it always near at hand. Designed by Raymond Loewy for Hill-Rom.

Few tables outside the hospital category make serviceable over-bed tables. This useful piece scores as a permanent bedside table, for it rolls to swing across edge of your bed. Top is a firm resting place for tray, magazines or books. Two shelves keep current magazines and choice reading at hand. This table eliminates insecure lap trays, provides a real bedside table always at hand to nurse one's hours abed. Made of teak and designed by Harold Schwartz for the Romweber Company.

What makes a heat-proof garden?

Heat- and drought-resistant plants help.

So do good watering devices used properly.

But just as important are shade, positioning of the plants and quality of the soil

At one time or another most gardens in this country are subjected to periods of heat or drought. If they have been planned with regard to this possibility, they'll survive the difficult days with little or no important damage. They'll look presentable in the heat and will pick up where they left off when moisture and cooler air come again.

The secret of this durability is built in. Once weather becomes oppressive, there is not a great deal you can do to counteract its effects. Watering, where it is permitted, helps, if the water is allowed to run deeply into the soil. But if the soil is heavily endowed with humus, the moisture-retaining, organic part of the soil, there may already be as much moisture held in the ground as you can apply. The more organic material you can add in such forms as peat, compost or leafmold, and the more deeply you work it into the soil, the more water will be available to plant roots when things get tough.

Fully as effective is the application of a nitrogen-rich plant food to encourage growth. If the root system of a plant is vigorous and extensive, it will extend deep into the ground where it can take advantage of the extra moisture there. Shallow-rooted plants are the first to give up the ghost in a drought since they can't reach this water.

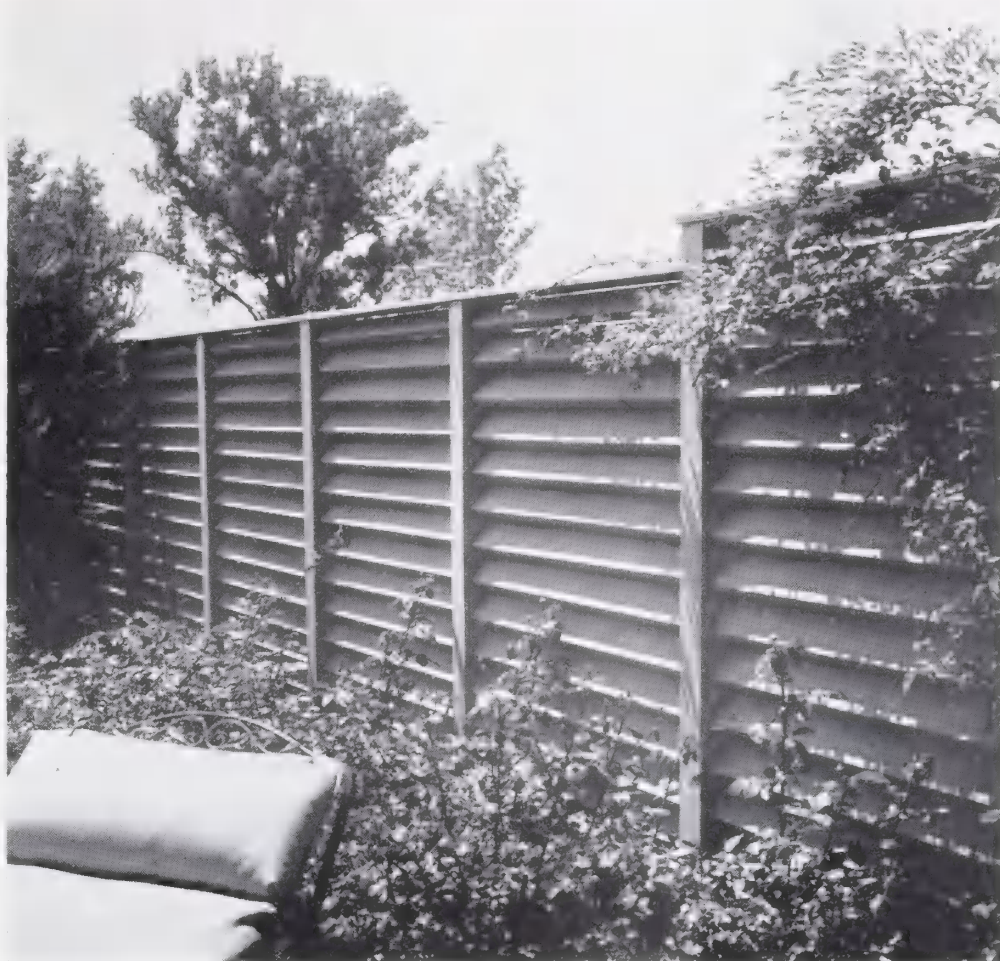

An extra precaution practiced more and more today is a mulch, at least 2 inches and preferable 3 inches or more deep, of buckwheat hulls, peat, wood shavings, pecan hulls, ground corn cobs, or whatever material is (Please turn to page 115)

Sturdy, louvered fence provides positive privacy, yet lets breezes pass through. A few roses, made more important by this fine architectural background, benefit from freely moving air. Mulched soil conserves moisture at all times.

Soil rich in plant food and moisture-retaining organic matter encourages trees and shrubs in garden to root deeply and extensively. As a result, plants make maximum use of what water there is, living until drought is relieved.

Here some of the most reliable heat and drought-resistant plants are arranged in pleasing sequence, from fine blades of grass to larger and darker leaves of taxus, vinca and hosta. Brick mowing strip restrains plants, defines beds.

Learn the fine art of serving beer. Here are the answers to 33 leading questions to help you appreciate the great American beers at their elegant best.

Here also are 9 choice recipes using beer in cooking

Beer is generally known as a lusty, gusty man's drink—a tavern quaff! Wines, on the other hand, are considered epicurean. "But beer is so bourgeois, isn't it?" How can anyone find romance in beer?

As usual, such observations have little basis in fact. Historically, through the centuries, beer has been for everybody—for plutocrat and plebeian. A survey completed last year by the U.S. Brewers' Foundation revealed that, although there is only a slight variation in beer consumption between the higher and lower brackets, more beer proportionately is consumed in the top-income groups by those who know and can afford the best. Contrary to popular notions, city people drink more beer than their country cousins. Far from being a drink of the pub, nine out of ten beer drinkers enjoy it at home.

Nor does beer belong entirely to a man's world. Two out of every three men enjoy beer, and so do 40 per cent of the women.

With beer, as with so many other adjuncts of the good life, knowledge adds to enjoyment. And there are many things that you should know, if you want to serve a perfect glass of beer and discuss it with discernment. Many fine recipes call for beer as an ingredient.

1. What qualities should I look for in beer?

A beer is judged, first of all, for clarity and brilliance; then, by its color, which may vary from palest gold to deepest mahogany, depending upon the character of the beer. Next, the aroma is noted: it should be faintly "hoppy." This means slightly resinous with a cool, clean fragrance, resembling the forest scent of pines. There should also be the faint honeyed sweetness of the malt, which means toasted, sprouted barley. The darker and more full-bodied the beer, the more apparent will be the whiff of malt.

Bubbles are noted also. A good beer should be lively, but the bubbles should be fine and small. In beer, as in champagne, small bubbles are a sign of skillful, careful brewing, also a sign of a clean glass. Next, observe the head, foam or collar. It should be creamy, dense, like whipped cream, not soapsudsy. Here again, the scrupulous cleanliness of the glass makes a difference. (You'll find our advice on how to clean beer glasses properly on page 93. It's well worth following.)

At last, you take a sip. In order to appreciate it fully, an expert will roll the beer, like tea, back against the roof of his mouth. Then he'll swallow it. The master brewers of America work to achieve a taste that is "light, dry, pleasant, wholesome, not too strong, and with an after-taste that is not too heavy or clinging." All in all, no one flavor should predominate, and there should be not the slightest hint of buttermilk or yeasty flavor.

One of the earliest New York brewers, the learned Jacobus, said of his own brew in (Please turn the page) the Seventeenth Century, "It is thin, subtle, clear, of bitter taste, has a pleasant acidity on the tongue, and many other good qualities." Modern brewers say that the taste should have tang and snap without being wild.

"Pungent" is another word much used by some experts in Milwaukee: while others attack the problem from the flanks and say cautiously, "Beer should be neither too bitter, nor too sweet."

"All in all," we were told at Pabst, "pleasantly gruff seems to evoke the evasive soul of hops, as well as any."

Martin Quigley, publicist-laureate for Budweiser and Michelob, says that a good beer should combine "laughter, deep talk and, beneath its foamy crown, a heart fraught with weltschmerz . . . bubbles of joy and bitter-sweetness of nostalgia."

2. Does beer, like wine, improve with age?

No! No! No! Beer is a perishable product, even when it is pasteurized; even when it contains such adjuncts as corn or rice. Beer is at least as sensitive as apples or oranges. Even under ideal conditions, the experts insist that it is probably not perfection after 90 days. If it is exposed to direct rays of the sun, it could be ruined in a matter of minutes. (Please turn to page 97)

To the woman with pride of home, a garden is one of her greatest resources. From it can come the foods and flowers which give her housekeeping a personal trademark

The womanly art of cultivating a garden

By JEAN LAWSON

Garden Editor

A garden is a means to many ends. No longer needed as a source of the basic food supply, it is for many women a gigantic bag of tricks, a fertile plot whose productions they channel into countless decorative, culinary and social delights.

With a garden to draw upon, women don't need to limit their menus to the standard produce of local markets. They grow the vegetables their recipes require. Last minute guests are taken in stride, for there is always something in the garden—fruit, flower or foliage—to give distinction to the simplest meals and table settings. Some women grow flowers keyed to their rooms. Others limit themselves to succession plantings of three different lettuces.

In almost any home today, spearmint for tea and julep is at hand. So are tarragon and rosemary and the more ubiquitous parsley and chives. But gardens allow for more delirious flights of fancy. Have you ever tasted fern fronds, gently simmered and served with melted butter? Try growing them in a shady corner, if there are no woods nearby.

We know of one garden planted each year with 15 different onions, each with its own distinctive flavor and place in the family meals. In another household the ripening of crab-apples on an ancient tree is the signal for married daughters to return home and make up a batch of jelly.

How perceptive the woman who remembers one guest's appreciation of fragrance with a tiny bouquet of scented geranium leaves on her bedstand, and takes to another friend in the hospital branches of gay autumn leaves to remind her of an especially pleasant drive they once took.

In each case, the garden is an indication of something important to someone in the family, the basis of dreams and memories, stuff for the rich fabric of family life.

25 plants one woman grows and why

Asparagus, the first springtime delicacy, never so sweet as when snapped from the plants, cooked at once, then flecked with butter and salt.

Rhubarb, tart and tasty, not insipid like the giant commercial varieties whose beauty is only skin deep. Cooked briefly for sauce to be eaten in spring and summer, longer for canned juice to sharpen winter-weary appetites; also a few quarts to be frozen for pies.

Lettuce, to fill the daily salad bowl with at least three varieties—tender, brittle Matchless (better even than famed Bibb); Bronze Beauty, nutty-flavored, a ruddy contrast for other greens; Black Seeded Simpson, a crisp, loosely headed yellow-green variety; as many others as space allows.

Tomatoes, to eat off the vine, savoring the foxy flavor; to eat and eat. She grows cherry tomatoes to serve with drinks, and "pears" to use in salads. Better than any you can buy, because they are vine-ripened, which is done less and less these days by commercial growers.

White radishes, crisp accompaniment to butter, bread and beer, or a tossed green salad.

Wax beans, for the family recipe of spicy whole bean pickles, packed with care into pint jars, and served with a flair on special occasions.

Mints, in variety, to change the pace and pungency of iced tea and juleps, and, of course, to serve with lamb. (Please turn to page 120)

GOODYEAR

UNDERGROUND LAWN SPRINKLING SYSTEM

YOU CAN make your lawn the envy of the neighborhood—without tedious digging and watering—by installing a Goodyear all-rubber Underground Sprinkling System.

Secret of a vigorous green turf is long, healthy roots under the entire lawn. Deep and complete watering, obtained by planned sprinkling, is the answer to this deep-root growth.

The Goodyear Underground Sprinkling System puts water where it is needed. Controlled raindrop watering at the touch of a tap—minimizes runoff and evaporation—saves on water bills!

And this all-rubber system offers many other advantages, too. The flexible pipe can be quickly and easily installed without trenching or tearing up the lawn. Pipe, fittings and heads won't rust or rot—won't clog with scale—won't split on freezing—will last indefinitely. Also, the flat-lying rubber heads are safer where children play, and won't nick lawnmower blades.

Best of all, the cost of the all-rubber Underground Sprinkling System by Goodyear is surprisingly low. Full details available at garden supply outlets everywhere. Or send in the coupon!

THE DILEMMA OF MODERN WOMAN IS OF HER OWN MAKING

the paper and, in general, sort of fooling time away. I know, because I've done it myself.

I find it much better for my morale, if housework is conscientiously attacked with a first-things-first system. I do the essential jobs, like bedmaking, dishwashing, picking up and cleaning, as quickly and as efficiently as possible.

It's amazing how much and how fast you can get done, when you don't fritter away your time and if you let your head save your feet. A good routine gives you something you can't get any other way: Pace is something by which to measure your time and effort. In an office, there are other people working alongside, an over-all routine to follow and something with which to compare yourself. But at home you are alone, and there is no one but you to give point and pattern to your day. If you don't do it by setting standards for yourself, which is to say a routine, you drift aimlessly and are completely disorganized. And being disorganized is ultimately a lot more wearing than working hard.

The reward for getting your essential work out of the way early and fast is that you gain big pieces of leisure time, generous enough to do those important things you want to do (creative projects of the sort you can read about elsewhere in this issue). It also lets you have more time with the children and a solid companionship with other women. Little, stolen bits of leisure are meaningless, useless, and net you nothing but a sense of guilt. So, do quickly what you must do, in order to have time for what you love to do.

But herein lies a secret that the young beginner at housekeeping hasn't caught on to yet. It's the part about loving some of your work. She doesn't love any of it, because she doesn't know anything about it. Housework seems mindless to her because in truth she hasn't actually put her mind on it seriously.

HOW do you take the mindlessness out of homemaking? Not by always taking it easy, by doing less and less. Usually this is just running away from the problem. Any subject becomes fascinating, if you know something about it. The more you know, the more fascinating it becomes. It's the minutiae, the subtleties, the fine points, that make fields like cooking so fascinating. The more you know, the deeper you get. The more knowledge you have, the more interested you become. And presently, what you thought of as work has turned out to be fun—such fun that you can hardly wait to get at it.

I CLAIM it's ignorance that makes work seem like drudgery, not work itself. But there is no excuse for drudgery in the modern home. For modern housekeeping is ringed about with as much science, art and technology as Big Business. To pick the right detergent or the right plastic for the job requires knowledge. To know how to understand the label on a can of paint takes a right up-to-date girl. Whether to buy four-inch or six-inch foam rubber is not child's play. To make sense out of the claims and counter-claims in the nutritional and food-fad world can be done only by some really serious reading of professional textbooks.

Oh yes, it takes plenty of studying and thinking to be a modern housekeeper. That's why it's such fun. There's nothing brainless about it. The days aren't long enough to find out all you need to know.

Just giving a woman a dishwasher, an automatic laundry, a super-jet vacuum cleaner and a polishing machine isn't going to take away her loneliness and boredom. We can't buy an integrated, orderly personal life from the furniture store on time. This has to be worked out by each woman. She has to get tough with herself. Living at home fosters non-discipline. Until she can create her own discipline, she is going to be bored and therefore feel overworked.

It is interesting and pertinent that in a recent study of the hours women spend at housework throughout the nation, it was found that women in farm communities, with fewer conveniences and more kinds of work, spend less time at their work than women in cities in well-equipped houses. This, to me, indicates perhaps more intelligent and realistic acceptance by country women of the job to be done.

I have discovered that homemaking and housekeeping really have the status of an art. To know, to care, to have the multiple skills, to be willing to give thought are the essentials of what HOUSE BEAUTIFUL calls "the womanly arts." The womanly arts are for joy—all sorts of joy. Being grim and tense about it is not the way to achieve this joy. Being well organized and well informed is.

My attitudes are not unique in my circle of friends. About 30 per cent of my friends agree with me that homemaking is a fascinating art. We make it a game to try to find a better way of doing things and we gladly pool our knowledge, because none of us can ever know it all—and we realize it.

But working is only a part of the womanly arts. Women should learn more about the importance of understanding and communicating with people. People need other people in a real, positive way. In this age of phenomena too awesome for the individual to absorb all by himself, with many problems and pressures nibbling constantly at our heels, we need other people as a kind of reference for measuring and evaluating these things.

We should learn to talk honestly and intelligently about the things we have on our minds—our worries, frustrations and fears, as well as our enthusiasms—instead of keeping our conversation constantly on the safe and tepid level of party chatter. There is nothing as heart-warming as the honest admission from another person that he or she, too, has worried about the same thing or has had the same kind of problem.

We all need good, old-fashioned neighborliness (helping each other baby-sit, for instance). But at the same time, we must remember our manners. It seems to me that there is an alarming lack of plain good manners in our daily life today—in all the little considerations and gestures of respect between people.

WE NEED to give ourselves the chance to learn about all the wonderful things there are in the world to enjoy. Learning to see, to feel and to discover can be the most exciting and rewarding things in life. Appreciating the small daily things—a beautiful evening sky or the warmth of a wood fire on a cold winter afternoon or the warm peace of a sunny summer picnic—can mean the difference between living and just plain existing.

It seems foolish that these simple things must be talked about as though they had to be sold. But I'm convinced that for many people these wonderful little satisfactions and small rewards that can come riding along on the stream of the day go by unnoticed, because there are too many demands, too much confusion, too much disorder dimming their vision.

There are also many things to see and discover in the people around us. We aren't too apt to notice or appreciate the growth and the changing needs of those closest to us. We forget that nothing in this life is ever static. Usually it is our own unchanging point of view that makes it seem so.

I MENTION these things, because I feel they are a vital part of what is the matter with the women of America—with everybody, for that matter. Most of us haven't time for any kind of inner reflection, to even be aware and thoughtful about what's going on around us. We keep no time or strength for ourselves and our peace of mind. Many of us don't even know how to relax. We're all so busy scrambling, allowing ourselves to become the prey of so many pressures, that we tend to go through our lives in a sort of helter-skelter fashion. We say we don't have time to find a better way. Actually all we need are organization and simplification.

I think education is largely to blame for the attitudes of so many women, but I think it is a failure of omission rather than commission. I don't hold with the theory that a college education makes a woman more restless. An education doesn't have to make a woman look down on herself as a woman, to have a complex about being "just a housewife." There is nothing about training your mind that should prevent using it for the complicated job of running a home.

Perhaps our colleges should have more courses to help women realize what a tremendously important role it is to be a dynamic modern woman. (And I don't mean Home Economics!) Perhaps we should have a Graduate School of the Womanly Arts on a par with the Harvard School of Business. Isn't it just as important? It's certainly just as deep and complicated as business, and it brings into play just as much "know how" and depth of understanding.

Here is an outline of why I think so many women today are restless, dissatisfied and think they are overworked, and what I think we ought to do about it:

1. Education. We aren't impressed enough at college by the social and cultural significance of our roles as women and homemakers. We're still acting a little guilty, because we're not men—a hangover from (Please turn to page 111)

Lovely Walnut...works wonders for your bedroom!

HERE in the "Sequence" group, you see proof of Kent-Coffey's success in making furniture that seems to be so much more expensive than it really is! Everywhere you look you see fine details—like parquetry on every top surface, and unique drawer pulls, aligned so as to form slim columns of brass. All pieces are "off the floor," resting lightly on sculptured bases. And everywhere you see the rich grain that makes walnut so lovely!

Basic, go-anywhere pieces give the "Sequence" group a marvelous flexibility. Chests, bookcases, desk, dressers—see how they align themselves to solve a difficult "long wall" problem, or turn a corner neatly. Ask your Kent-Coffey dealer to show you the "Sequence" soon! Or write for name of nearest dealer to Kent-Coffey, Dept. H-A, Lenoir, N.C.

3. Where should I buy it? Or doesn't it matter?

Because of its perishability, it pays to follow the crowd when you are buying beer. You should go where the turnover is greatest and most interest taken.

4. In bottles or cans?

Most American beers are now available in bottles and in cans. Both have their place. In spite of extraordinary technical advances in can manufacturing and linings, beer lasts longer in glass. However, in the summertime or whenever or wherever stocks are frequently replenished, even the most finicky can enjoy the great convenience of beer in cans. And cans stack more easily and efficiently in the refrigerator.

As for sizes, there is a much wider choice than most of us realize: quart bottles, pint bottles, quart cans, pint cans, 12-ounce bottles and cans (most popular size) and also seven-ounce "quickies." Because you don't want to allow beer to stand after it has been opened, always use the size which can be emptied all at once.

5. How do U. S. beers compare with those imported?

Many of the famous brews of the United States may have had their beginnings as copies of European beers, but this era is past. American beers have a character of their own now. On the whole, they are lighter and drier, less filling (fewer calories), and less alcoholic. The flavors of malt and hops are less pronounced, the aftertaste less clinging. Imported beers are often known as high-character beers. Ours are more delicate and subtle and fresher in the U.S.

Generally, it is agreed among the experts that these delicate beers are the most difficult to make, requiring the most exquisite care, for the slightest deviation becomes apparent. American techniques, by the way, are being studied and adopted all over the world. In the guest books at Miller, Pabst and Schlitz in Milwaukee, we saw names of hundreds of visitors from Denmark, Germany and South America; and from Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, England, France, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway and Switzerland, too.

American brewers go to great lengths to insure that the taste of their beer pleases the American palate. At Pabst Brewery, for instance, a taste-test laboratory is maintained in the Guest Center so that some 30,000 people a year have an opportunity to express their preferences after sampling many different brands and types of beer served at exactly the same temperature and under ideal conditions.

BEER IN THE CHAMPAGNE MANNER

6. How can I tell when beer has passed its prime?

With age, a beer "breaks down," forming a veil. Often sediment appears on the bottom of a bottle. This is all right for an old burgundy—not for beer.

7. What kinds of food go best with beer?

Beer seems to blend well with almost any food, except those with heavy cream sauces and those which have been flavored with wines or brandy. It has no affinity with sweets, though a sip of cold beer is not out of place with a good tart apple pie and cheddar cheese. For all sorts of highly-flavored, spicy dishes which would overpower a wine, beer is indicated.

8. How can I use beer to enhance the flavor of my favorite dishes?

Appetizers, soups, ragouts, pancakes, fritters, potato salad, coleslaw, sea food, cheese dishes, bread, and even chocolate cake!

Not only in Europe, but ever since colonial times in our own country, beer has often been used instead of water to add variety and character to many dishes. For recipes and suggestions see end of this article on pages 98 and 99.

9. Must I use flat or stale beer for cooking?

Many of the old recipes call for stale beer, but we have found, after much testing, that though flat beer may be used, freshly opened beer is even better. When you are measuring, however, be sure to fill the cup with beer, not foam.

10. What about beer, if I want to lose weight?

Some doctors are including beer in weight-watching regimens, for beer is satisfying and filling. Psychologically, it makes a diet more acceptable. Dieters who drink beer are less likely to go off on "eating binges."

11. How does beer compare in calorie content with other foods?

An eight-ounce glass of light American beer registers between 92.8 and 100.4 on the calorimeter—about the same as a six-ounce glass of orange juice.

12. How does beer compare, alcoholically, with other drinks?

In order to get as much alcohol as you'd have in one dry Martini, you must drink about three (12-ounce) bottles of beer.

13. What is lager beer?

Lager, the popular American type, is a bright, sparkling beer, brewed from a malt of sprouted barley, not too heavily roasted and generally combined with some other cereal, such as corn or rice, hops and water. It is fermented and "lagered," (the German word for stored), for several weeks and during this period, it is carbonated, or in some cases "krausened" in the old-fashioned way.

14. How does lager differ from ale?

Ale is more aromatic, usually fuller-bodied and often a touch more bitter than beer. Entirely different strains of yeast are used. Ale is fermented faster, at higher temperatures, and the yeast remains at the top of the brew, rather than resting at the bottom.

15. What is bock beer? Where and when can I get it?

Known as the brew of spring, many legends cluster around the famous bock—a dark, sweet, richer beer. This richer brew is supposed to have the same tonic effect as grandmotherly doses of sulphur and molasses on winter-worn people.

A generation or two ago, Bock Beer Festivals were popular in many parts of America around St. Patrick's day. Now, Luchows' Restaurant in New York is one of the few restaurants which retains the old custom. There are signs of a revival, however. For the first time in many years, Pabst is bottling an excellent bock beer, which may be available the whole year. There is no reason why not, if there is a demand.

16. What is the right way to pour beer?

Not by sliding the beer warily down the side of a slanted glass—as so many waitresses do. The best technique: Place the neck of the bottle or lip of the can over the edge of a wetted glass, and then tilt the bottle to a high angle, so the beer gurgles into the glass and a fine, dense, textured head comes up. Then lower the bottom of the bottle and let the beer flow more slowly until the foam nears the top of the glass, always allowing space for foam to rise to the lip.

Many people prefer to pour their own beer at the table, and it is gracious to allow them this particular opportunity.

17. What happens when beer gets too cold?

If beer is served a little too cold, some of the aroma is lost and you are not able to appreciate the subtleties of a fine brew. If the temperature gets very low, close to freezing, beer develops a "chill haze," or cloud, which indicates that some of the proteins have broken down. The flavor will never be the same.

In some circles, a strange custom has arisen of putting cans of beer into the freezer, getting it very cold, or even frozen, so that it can be carried to a picnic and will even be useful to keep other foods chilled. Result: ruined beer.

18. Is there a right and wrong way to open a beer can?

You should make a small puncture first and allow the pressure to equalize then push the opener down as far as it will go. Punch only one, not two. You get a much better collar.

19. How cold should beer be served?

One connoisseur's answer, "Not nearly so cold as it usually is in these United States." Too-cold beer loses its character and aroma. It goes flat; you might just as well be drinking ice water. A temperature of 40°-45° F. is generally considered just about right for American beers.

20. Is there a way to chill beer fast, without ruining it?

The best way to cool beer quickly is with "wet cold," in other words, treat it like champagne; surround the bottle with ice and turn gently a couple of times during chilling.

21. How should you serve beer? In what kind of glass? In pottery? Or metal?

(Please turn the page)

As to shape, design and material, your choice is vast. In addition to glasses specifically designed for beer, many imaginative hostesses are now using brandy inhalers, double old-fashioned glasses, zombie glasses, and king-size cocktail glasses.

22. What size glass?

It is a good rule to serve only that quantity of beer which can be consumed quickly before it gets warm, and lifeless.

23. What's all this about rinsing beer glasses with cold water before filling them?

Definitely this is one of the arts of serving beer—to rinse the glass beforehand with cold water. Removes any odors which might cling to the glass and affect the flavor of the beer—such as cigarette smoke or cooking smells. Also, it helps to insure a good long-lasting head.

24. How much head is right?

Part of the esthetic pleasure of drinking beer is provided by the head. A beautiful, creamy cap is a joy to the eye. There is also the exquisite tactile contrast of foam, topping cold clear liquid. Only a college youth intent on getting the most beer for his money will insist on having it without a cap. A high or low collar is a matter of taste, but the connoisseurs usually strive for a head about an inch deep and gently rounding across the top. Whether or not the cap is long-lasting depends upon a number of factors. It is not necessarily indicative of the quality of the beer. The foam is denser on certain types of beer, like bock, where you can write your initial with a ballpoint pen. The touch of a woman's lipstick will cause the foam on beer to disappear. But so will the touch of fatty foods. Even an infinitesimal trace of grease does the damage—to the foam. It doesn't necessarily affect the flavor.

25. How should you wash a beer glass? What type of detergent?

At what is informally known as the College of Beer Knowledge, conducted by Anheuser Busch, for restaurateurs and tavern keepers, a good part of the training is devoted to the care and cleaning of beer glasses.

First, rinse the glasses with clear water, preferably soft water, so there'll be no spotting.

Next, wash using a brush and a non-sudsing, chlorinated detergent in water—Dishwasher-All, Thanx, Finish or Cascade.

Third, rinse in hot water, preferably 180° F. for fast drain-drying.

26. How should you polish a beer glass?

Don't! Even a trace of cottonseed oil from a freshly ironed towel is enough to make the glass unsatisfactory for beer. Glasses should be allowed to drain dry, preferably, not on a towel, but on a plastic or wire rack.

27. Is the electric dishwasher acceptable for washing beer glasses?

From every point of view, it's just perfect.

28. How should beer glasses be stored?

Those who really care about their beer, insist that their glasses be kept on the shelf upside down to protect them from dirt and odors. Keep in a closed cupboard, not on an open shelf, and away from kitchen odors.

29. Does sunlight affect beer?

Light, particularly direct sunlight, has a disastrous and quick effect upon the flavor of beer.

30. Is beer fully protected by a dark bottle?

Unfortunately, no, although the effect of the light is slowed down by the dark glass.

31. Why do some people insist on draught beer, rather than bottled beer?

Draught beer is not pasteurized. It comes in barrels and must be kept constantly under refrigeration. In a well-run tavern or restaurant, where beer is properly treated, carefully dispensed and used in quantity, draught beer is a real treat. But you must know your tavern. Bottled beer is usually more dependable.

A few beers, like the glorious Michelob made by Anheuser Busch, is available only on draught, and incidentally, only to selected taverns which can be trusted to treat it with proper reverence.

BEER IN THE CHAMPAGNE MANNER

32. If you want draught beer for a party, how do you get it?

The yellow pages of your Classified Telephone Directory give names of beer distributors, who will supply ice-cold kegs often in coolers packed with ice cubes. Generally, you can order half kegs or barrels, quarters or eighths, which in some localities are known as ponies.

33. Should we refill a beer glass, or offer a fresh one?

Always a fresh "beer clean" glass, since the appearance of the glass after it is emptied is part of the joy of a connoisseur, for each sip should show, making a ring around the inside of the glass. This is the origin of the famous Ballantine "Three Rings."

34. What is the most economical way to buy beer?

Large sizes are, of course, always more economical than smaller ones, but don't forget that even a little flat beer that must be thrown away eats up the difference. Returnable bottles, if you don't mind this slight inconvenience, save about 48¢ on the case.

35. Should beer ever go into the freezer?

For quick chilling, beer cans or bottles can be laid on their side in the freezer or the ice compartment of the refrigerator, but for only ten minutes and they should be turned once.

36. Why are some men so particular about their bottle openers?

The slightest trace of rust or dirt from an imperfect opener can affect the flavor of beer. An improper opener may chip or grind tiny bits of glass off the top off the beer bottle.

37. Is it true that the character of beer depends on water?

Quite true: 89 per cent of the finished beer is water. Water is used in every step of the brewing operation. Water must be biologically pure, of course, and its mineral content must be known. A water that is practically ideal for beer, like that of Pilsner and Bohemia, will not make a good ale. Certain regions are noted for light beers, others for dark beers, others for ales—due to local waters.

38. If beers are dependent upon water, how is it that you find the same brands of beer being made in different parts of the country?

Nowadays in America technological advances have made it possible to treat waters so that each famous brand may have its water practically made to order. Naturally, it is more practical and infinitely less expensive to locate a brewery in an area where the natural water supply comes close to the ideal. "High-character" highly flavored beers and ales (like some of the famous English and German) are quite dependent on the natural flavor of the water and probably could not be made in other places.

Flemish Carbonnade

To serve six or eight persons, get 4 pounds of stewing beef. Flour the meat lightly. Cut 4 slices of bacon into bits. Fry out slowly and remove the bits from the pan. Brown the floured meat in the bacon fat, then remove the meat from the skillet and put it into a casserole. Drain the remaining fat from the skillet, add 2 cups of water, bring to a boil, add 2 packages dehydrated onion soup, 1 12-ounce can or bottle of beer. Pour over meat in casserole. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon parsley flakes, 1 teaspoon thyme. Cook in a preheated oven at 300° F. for 2 hours, or in a covered Dutch oven on top of the stove for about the same length of time. Just before serving, stir in ¼ cup white vinegar. Serve with fluffy boiled potatoes.

Shrimps in Beer

Get a 12-ounce package of quick-frozen de-veined jumbo shrimps in their shells. Heat a 12-ounce can of beer along with 1 small onion sliced, a bit of thyme, bay and parsley, and a slice of lemon. When the beer is simmering hot, toss in the shrimps and then cook for 5 minutes.

These shrimps may be used to garnish Nasi Goreng; in which case, you would use the liquid to cook the rice.

Shrimps in beer make a delightful, though somewhat informal, appetizer to serve at a party or as a first course. Give each guest a large soup dish, and into it ladle a little of the liquid to keep the shrimps hot. Provide each guest also with a cup of melted butter, flavored with a little minced parsley, some lemon juice and some freshly ground black pepper. Each dunks his own, in this salubrious sauce, and there is no way to eat except with the fingers.

Beer Bread

Many an ancient and honored dark bread has been made with beer, but the best we ever tasted comes from a mix—Cornell Triple Rich Whole Wheat Bread Mix—which you can order by mail from Great Valley Mills, Ivyland, Bucks County, Pennsylvania. (The 89¢ bag makes 3 loaves.) Just follow the simple printed directions on the bag, but instead of using 3 cups of warm water, use 1½ cups of warm water and one 12-ounce bottle or can of beer.

Rich, Moist, Dark Chocolate Cake

You'd never dream how good a chocolate cake can be made from a mix until you've tried it with beer. Use your favorite chocolate or devils food cake mix. Instead of any other liquid, use beer, same amount. But be sure to add ¼ teaspoon baking soda. If you want to make your cake even more luxurious, try the well-publicized trick of adding at the last, ¼ cup Kraft's Salad Oil. Your cake will have a wonderfully continental look and texture. It will keep moist longer.

Exactly the same recipe may be used with spice cake, the new caramel cake mix, honey cake, ginger cake and ginger bread.

Alsatian Potato Salad

Tiny new, peeled potatoes, or potato balls, are cooked in beer to make a distinguished potato salad. Dress with mayonnaise thinned with beer, or use sour cream which has been ever-so-lightly gilded with curry powder and seasoned with salt, pepper and also maybe a dash of caraway.

Beer-glazed Ham

A canned par-boiled ham, cottage ham butt, or smoked pork shoulder may be glazed in this fashion. Combine 4 tablespoons of brown sugar with ¼ teaspoon Colman's Dry Mustard, 2 tablespoons Heinz Tomato Ketchup, 1 teaspoon finely grated onion, ½ cup beer. Place the ham in a baking pan and cover with glaze. Bake in a moderate oven at 350° F. for about one-half hour, or until ham is tender and well heated, and the glaze has a deep, rich, polished sheen.

English Rarebit, New Style

To a can or jar of prepared Welsh Rarebit, add ¼ cup beer. Sprinkle lightly with powdered basil and a few grains of cayenne pepper or else add a drop or two of Tabasco.

Sunday Supper Soup

This is very rich and very good. Combine one can condensed tomato soup, one can condensed pea soup, one 12-ounce bottle of beer, one cup milk, one 6½-ounce can King Crabmeat. Heat all together, but do not boil hard. Serve with garlicked rye bread toast or with those miraculous Bel-Air, French-toasted Rye Croutons that come in a box put up by The Bel-Air Food Products Company, Los Angeles, California. These special croutons are flavored with garlic and caraway.

Nasih Goreng

This interesting, Indonesian specialty comes ready to heat and serve in a tin under the Cresca label. Ask for Indonesian Fried Rice with Meatballs.

Or, you can make your own Nasih Goreng and with Minute Rice. Add 1 cup of beer to 2 cups rich chicken stock, clam juice or consommé, and bring to a boil; add 2⅔ cups Minute Rice. Salt to taste; mix just enough to moisten the rice. Cover, remove from heat, and then let it stand in a warm place 13 minutes.

Meanwhile, heat ⅓ cup High Hat Peanut Oil, and in the hot oil cook 4 medium-sized onions, chopped, 2 cloves of finely minced or crushed garlic. Stir frequently, add the rice and cook until it browns. Keep on stirring. Then add 1 teaspoon ground coriander seed, 1 teaspoon ground cumin seed, ½ teaspoon chili powder, ¼ teaspoon mace and—strange as it may sound—4 tablespoons of peanut butter.

(This is a good opportunity to try Procter & Gamble's new Jit Peanut Butter, which is so creamy smooth it fairly swoons upon the tongue and mixes easily, quickly.)

Nasih Goreng is generally garnished either with tiny meatballs or chicken and shrimp, often cooked in beer. Served with sautéed bananas and/or a fried egg. Cucumber, chutney and peanuts are optional, but you should certainly provide some kind of hot sambal sauce and kroepoeks. All available at TelBurn of New York, 335 East 55th Street, New York, N.Y.

that she is no fuddy-duddy, no throwback to our grandmothers. Her feeling for color is crisp, piquant and daring. She approaches common objects with a sense of artistic playfulness that produces amusing combinations. Yet her house is practical, easy to care for and anything but a back breaker.

Cooking is her main thrill now. "There is so much to master in the world of cooking that it will take me all my life. I'll not live long enough to learn all I want to know," she says.

She used to have a butler and a maid; however, she did the cooking herself. Now she has eliminated all servants—except a once-a-week laundress. She enjoys all parts of housekeeping and finds she gets into the swing of things better when she is doing it all herself.

When the Gimbels started building their present home on Biscayne Bay, Florida, they had already tried living in various and dissimilar houses. They had tried New York apartments, a Connecticut farmhouse, and a Florida Spanish house, to name a few. Their experience had taught them a great deal about themselves and the way they wanted to live. They had formed some definite ideas about their own tastes and they had learned that if you want a good house, you must hire expert professional help. They engaged Architect Wahl Snyder and Decorator Haygood Lasseter, both of Miami, to design and decorate. (Please turn to page 102)

Mrs. Gimbel takes as much pride in her pots and pans as her living-room accessories, collecting them abroad or anywhere else, displaying them as precious objects.

success. I just barge ahead, and try. And I use common sense, which can carry you a lot farther than most people realize."

That desire to make puppets to play with led Mrs. Dawson to go to art school, because she wanted to learn to model their heads and faces. She's been going to art school off and on ever since. (In fact, she goes to school every summer, because that is when she is freest.) But art school didn't teach her the craft skills. She had to develop these by trial and error, for you learn them only by the doing.

Her need as a child to create a workable puppet led her to sketching, carving, clay modeling, ceramics, stage design and decoration, script writing, costume design, make-up, acting, music, pantomime techniques, characterizations, voice and dance. And those arts eventually led her to others for the home: embroidery, mosaics, interior decorating, flower arranging.

Learning all these things required more than a passing interest in puppetry. It took study, concentration and years of work.

Mrs. Dawson doesn't dabble in the arts. For her they are always means to some end and that end is always something she wants to make. She really gets in deep, trying to figure out things for herself, many times coming up with a better way of doing a craft than the experts have hit upon. Most important, she isn't afraid to try something new.

In making her first mosaic (see color photograph on page 54), she followed some of the printed instructions, but only the ones that seemed essential to her. When, after completely planning and sketching her design, she arrived at the pasting stage, she cut and fitted each piece so precisely that she eliminated the need for grouting or filling in the spaces with mortar. Her finished product is technically a perfect piece of workmanship. However, it did require such painstaking labor that Mrs. Dawson has decided that her next mosaic will be made of material with less regular shapes, such as pebbles, stones and shells. Having a variety of sizes and textures will be more fun to work with and will give a completely different result. Never convinced that the most recent solution is the final one, she continues to search for other answers, always making the best use of her time.

sense of accomplishment in just fulfilling her duties to the club's guests. But she wanted a separate private life, as well, and so she now considers every piece of spare time as precious, to be used to develop more of her talents.

Several of her wood carvings have been used in the clubhouse at Thunderbird, and, at the moment, she is planning the interior decoration for a new country club in the San Francisco Bay area. Every room in her own home contains some expression of her creativity. She also maintains her career as a professional puppeteer, recently completing a series of 52 movie shorts, for which she created the puppet characters.

No art is a mystery to this lady who mastered the intricacies of puppet craftsmanship. Nor is housewifery a stranger to her. She lives a wonderful, exciting life, because she explores the big world of the creative arts right in her own home.

THE HOME OF A WOMAN WHO ADORES HOUSEKEEPING

the house. But even with these two professionals working together, it was the Gimbels' ideas and reasoning behind every detail that make their home so extraordinary.

"I started by telling Mr. Snyder that I wanted a barn-like effect in our main living area," recalls Mrs. Gimbel. "I wanted it to be one big room with white board walls and a brick floor. White as a background gave me freedom to play with accessory color."

From this beginning she outlined her family's other needs—a den for Mr. Gimbel, a studio-bedroom for Toni, the growing daughter (published in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL in September 1955), a screened porch off the master bedroom for breakfast and for evenings, when the terrace is insect-ridden.

THE PLAN of the kitchen mattered a great deal to Mrs. Gimbel. Cooking, for her, is the most interesting and exciting side of housework. Her enthusiasm for good food is so contagious that her friends and family inevitably follow her into the kitchen. Knowing this, she planned a kitchen where several people might cook together without getting into each other's way.

Sometimes her kitchen companion is her mother, Mrs. Gabriel Heatter. Sometimes it's Toni. Or it's dinner guests, who can't be kept out of the place. She encourages all of them according to her own principles of serving a few good dishes, well prepared.

The exceptionally generous counter space in the kitchen means that one person can be mixing a cake at the bake center, another preparing vegetables at the sink, while a third can be operating at the stainless-steel stovetop. This center-island cooking-top is within an arm's reach of every preparation counter and its stainless-steel drop leaves literally make it usable from all four sides.

Outside, beside a stone-paved terrace is a snack bar with a small refrigerator, running water and storage cabinets for the patio dishes and flatware. The Gimbels use this small service appendage when they want to barbecue and eat in the open air. They entertain this way a great deal.

By insisting that her kitchen be integrated architecturally and decoratively with the rest of her house, Mrs. Gimbel can bring her cooking interests right into the living room, so to speak. In fact, the Gimbels would rather give a dinner party than go to one. What some women call effort, she calls fun. As she puts it, "The act of getting a party meal is such fun that I'm rewarded even before the guests have arrived."

The decorating of her home is one more "womanly art" that Mrs. Gimbel has thought long and hard about. She hired one of the best interior decorators in Florida and then she did all she could to convey her own values and desires to Mr. Lasseter.

"I told him that I wanted rooms with little or no pattern," says the owner. "I really like a blank. White on white has the right effect on me, but when I do pick a color, I want it to be strong—a deep blue, hot yellow and Mexican pink. I also wanted the same colors and fabrics repeated in different rooms to give the house continuity."

Mrs. Gimbel worked so closely with Mr. Lasseter that when they got the on-the-spot inspiration to paint a rectangle of yellow above the dining area, neither could remember who had had this brain child. The total result is completely unlike any of Mr. Lasseter's other jobs, so it is clear he interpreted her wishes well.

Even with her house completely furnished, Mrs. Gimbel continues to have brain children. She loves to originate fresh flower arrangements to accompany her menu. For instance, a line of pinks and white custard cups go with an informal lunch. She moves her objects about continually trying for new effects from new combinations. She believes in hanging prints that cost no more than cut flowers and in buying new ones often. And she adores unusual dishes. Last summer when she went abroad for the first time, she had a field day looking for new china. She had some Limoges plates made to order in Paris, took classes at the Cordeliers and bought kitchen gadgets. In short, she had a joyous room.

WHEN asked how she had the confidence to try her hand at so many skills, she answered:

"My parents always told me I could do anything. So it never occurred to me I might fail. So much confidence is more than half the battle. I'm trying to give my daughter this priceless asset."

"I never took a course in jewelry craft. Yet I have worked in many of them, from textile painting to metal working—and made money at it. I learned to make silver jewelry just by buying the equipment at a store and following the instructions. My first jewelry order came by pure chance, because a buyer in Macy's Little Shop asked where I got it. I had just made it. It was my first piece. Three days later I got an order for $2,000. What I didn't know then was staggering. But I soon learned. By then it was sink or swim."

This attitude of "I'll try anything, because there is sure to be pleasure in it, if I approach it right" is rather the keystone of Mrs. Gimbel's approach to life and homemaking.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL finds it full of significance, foreshadowing a new breed of woman and a new kind of life where home is the center.

Wash carrots with a stiff brush and slice thinly, or julienne with the proper tool. Into the frying pan put butter, M.S.G. and sugar (if carrots are not fresh-picked), add carrots, then cover with lettuce leaves dripping with water. Cover and cook over low heat 20 minutes. Take out lettuce leaves, add parsley, tarragon, cream, salt and pepper, mix well and serve in a hot dish immediately. (A friend of mine uses fresh chopped mint.) Serves eight.

Spinach

2½ pounds spinach
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 clove garlic (run through press)
1 teaspoon Beau Monde Seasoning
½ teaspoon M.S.G.
¼ teaspoon sugar
⅛ teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper (Spice Islands)

Put in your frying pan the olive oil, garlic, Beau Monde, sugar, pepper and M.S.G. Wash spinach well, cut with kitchen scissors into very small pieces. Take a handful and cut across the bunch until you have no more. Put in the frying pan and cover tightly and quickly, bring to a boil and turn to lowest heat for five minutes. Dish out and serve. You might turn it once, but, remember, in taking off the lid of any vegetable you lose a lot of its flavor in the escaping steam. Try tossing in a tablespoon of sesame seeds just before serving, for added interest. Chives and bacon are also an intriguing addition to spinach. Serves eight.

Squash

(Summer varieties, zucchini, yellow crook neck, etc.)

⅓ pound per person or 3 pounds for 8 persons
3 green onions (tops and all chopped)
1 teaspoon M.S.G.
½ teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon Beau Monde Seasoning (Spice Islands)
3 tablespoons butter
⅛ teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper
⅓ cup water

Wash squash well. When you buy squash, buy half green and half yellow for interest in color. Run fork down the outside of the skin, triating it all around for eye interest. It takes only a minute and the slices look so attractive.

Into your frying pan put butter, seasonings and water. Slice squash thinly and distribute around pan evenly. Cover and put on high heat until steaming; then turn to lowest heat for 10 minutes or less. Serve with sour cream or your favorite sour cream sauce, if desired.

A dash of oregano on the squash is a change you will probably like. This should be added during the last few minutes of cooking time, as it tends to get bitter if cooked too long. A quarter of a teaspoon (scant) is enough when it is well ground in the palm of your hand and tossed over the squash. A heaping tablespoon of chopped chives and parsley are always a delicious addition to squash. Serves eight.

I do not think it necessary to use Monosodium Glutamate in strong-flavored vegetables, such as broccoli, cauliflower, cabbage and Brussels sprouts. In serving broccoli, it is most attractive to have flowerettes of cauliflower scattered throughout or centered on your vegetable platter, as it gives you color variety.

Broccoli

1 teaspoon Beau Monde Seasoning
½ teaspoon sugar
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 clove garlic (optional) mashed through garlic press
1 shallot, minced
½ cup water (generous)
2 tablespoons butter (or olive oil)

Allow two to three stalks per person, depending upon size. Wash well and cut stem to tender part. Now this is a little secret: The flower cooks much faster than the stem. So run your knife up the stem, splitting it several times so that it will cook more quickly, so that all parts are equal in size. Use care not to break the sections off the stem.

Into the frying pan put the water, sugar, garlic, shallot, Beau Monde, pepper, and butter. Arrange broccoli with stems toward the center of the pan. Cover so you lose none of the steam. Bring to a quick boil, and then turn to low heat for 15 to 25 minutes depending upon the size of the broccoli. You should have no water left by the time cooking is done. Serve with browned butter or Hollandaise Sauce, if you prefer. Serves eight.

Cabbage

Select a heavy cabbage, for the heavier it is, the more solid it is.

Allow a 2-pound cabbage for eight. If you are having four for dinner, save half the cabbage, wrap well in waterproof bag or foil, store and use for cole slaw later. You can sprinkle cooked cabbage with caraway seeds or freshly grated nutmeg for different flavor zest.

Wash well and slice in inch-thick wedges, removing all the heart. Into your frying pan put:

- 3 tablespoons butter
- 1 scant teaspoon sugar
- 1 tablespoon Beau Monde Seasoning (scant)
- $\frac{1}{8}$  teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup water (scant)
- 2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Arrange cabbage wedges around pan. Do not stack on top of each other, as it takes so much longer to cook. It is preferable to use two pans, since quick cooking is the secret of mild sweet cabbage. Tightly cover and put over high heat until steaming. Then quickly reduce heat to lowest flame and cook for 15 minutes. When done, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve with melted butter or sour cream sauce. Serves eight.

Brussels Sprouts

Select fresh crispy green Brussels sprouts, wash well, cut a thin slice off the bottom, discard any discolored leaves. Allow 4 to 5 per person.

Into your frying pan put that old routine:

- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon sugar
- 1 teaspoon Beau Monde Seasoning
- 2 tablespoons butter
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup water (scant)
- $\frac{1}{8}$  teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper
- 1 green onion, chopped
- Freshly grated nutmeg

Arrange sprouts in pan, cover tightly and bring to quick boil. Turn heat down to low and cook 20 minutes. Grate nutmeg over, add more butter if desired and serve at once. Serves eight.

Asparagus

Asparagus is another beautiful vegetable—distinguished in taste and appearance.

- 4 pounds asparagus
- 1 teaspoon M.S.G.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon sugar
- $\frac{1}{8}$  teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper
- 1 shallot chopped (if desired)
- 2 tablespoons butter
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup water (scant)

Take asparagus stalk in both hands, gripping firmly, bend stalk until it snaps in two, at point of least resistance. This method prevents one from getting a stringy stalk of asparagus. A knife should never touch this vegetable. Save the tough end for soup or flavoring. Wash. Into the frying pan put sugar, Monosodium Glutamate, pepper, shallot, butter and water. Arrange asparagus spears, tips facing outer rim of pan. Cover tightly. Bring to quick steam, cook for 10 minutes on low flame. Serve immediately with browned butter and chopped nuts or your own favorite sauce. Serves eight.

Corn on the Cob

Unhusked corn

Kettle of boiling water (yes, this is once when I use lots of water)

Do not husk the corn completely. Try not to husk down too far in checking for worms. Corn to be cooked this way must be freshly picked for the finest flavor.

When water reaches full rolling boil, drop in corn. Allow water to return to full rolling boil, then cook on high heat for two to three minutes. Pour off water. Take two clean tea towels to use in pulling husks back, remove silk, put in serving dish, pour over melted butter and a slight sprinkling of Java Cracked Pepper, and serve at once. The extra corn, if allowed to stay in the husks, does not continue to cook, but keeps warm for a long time, until the second helping is ready to be served. Corn cooked this way retains all the natural sweetness and it is an interesting and dramatic way to serve it.

If you cannot get real garden-fresh corn, try baking it. Husk the corn, remove silk, spread with soft butter, sprinkle with  $\frac{1}{8}$  teaspoon of sugar, a few grains of Java Cracked Pepper, wrap in aluminum foil, and bake in a 325° F. oven for half an hour. This is delicious and a far better way than cooking it in boiling water.

Tomatoes

- 1 tomato per person
- $\frac{1}{8}$  pound butter
- 1 teaspoon brown sugar
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon Mei Yen (Spice Islands)
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon M.S.G.
- 3 tablespoons minced chives
- 4 tablespoons minced celery
- 2 tablespoons minced parsley
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon oregano, crushed in palms of hands

Salt and pepper

Melt butter in pan, place whole peeled tomatoes, cored side down, add sugar, Mei Yen, and M.S.G. Simmer covered five minutes on low heat. Turn tomatoes over carefully, spoon butter over tomatoes, add chives, celery, parsley, and oregano. Simmer for 5 minutes and spoon over sauce, add a little salt and pepper, and serve on a hot platter. This is a provocative version of that good old stand-by, stewed tomatoes. If you are using canned tomatoes, get the whole canned ones, boil down the juice, add all the seasonings, cook for two minutes, then add tomatoes and cook for two minutes or until tomatoes are thoroughly heated. Serves four.

Eggplant

This is such a favorite dish in other countries, I do wish we in this country would eat it more often. The two tried and true recipes are, of course, our fried eggplant and eggplant baked with tomatoes. But they are not the best recipes if you want to get the full flavor of this delicate vegetable. Here's a better one:

- 1 large eggplant
- 1 can Pioneer Minced Clams
- 2 cloves garlic
- 2 tablespoons minced parsley
- 4 tablespoons minced chives
- $\frac{1}{8}$  pound butter
- 1 cup croutons à la Trader Vic

This dish can be served as an entrée, or as a rich vegetable with cold turkey or chicken. Drain the can of clams, putting the juice in the frying pan. Add two cloves of garlic and heat. Eggplant has to be cut rather quickly for it turns dark promptly. Peel and cut into small chunks and put into the clam broth. Add butter and cook for 10 minutes. You might have to turn it once during cooking, using a spatula. Remove garlic, add parsley and chives, and cook for 2 minutes. Turn off heat, add clams and mix well. Do not cook clams, as they toughen. Put mixture in hot serving dish and add croutons à la Trader Vic. Serves four.

Croutons à la Trader Vic

Remove crusts from four slices of bread. Cut bread in small cubes, and sauté in butter until well cooked and delicately browned.

Drain well on paper towels and put in a paper sack. Toss in some chopped parsley and freshly grated Parmesan cheese and shake thoroughly. Store in covered container until ready to use. These are good slung over squash, string beans, and spinach.

Or if you want a very simple version of eggplant, just sauté it in butter and use loads of Mei Yen powder for seasoning. Sprinkle with chopped chives and parsley and serve. It is far better than dipped in a batter and fried.

Mushrooms

1 pound fresh mushrooms
1 large clove garlic, run through garlic press
1/8 pound butter
1/2 teaspoon M.S.G.
2 tablespoons minced celery
2 tablespoons minced chives
2 tablespoons minced parsley
1/4 tablespoon ginger

Melt butter in frying pan, add garlic and M.S.G. To prepare mushrooms, do not wash unless necessary. Rinse, take out stems, scrape and chop them finely. Put stems, celery, chives and parsley in melted butter and simmer for 1 minute, add mushroom caps and put on cover and cook for 2 minutes, add ginger, stir well and cook for another minute or two until caps are crispy tender. Over-cooking is death to mushrooms, for they wilt and are then only good to mix into a sauce. But cooking them for about 5 minutes puffs them into beautiful juicy morsels. Serve as a first course with melba toast. You may like salt and pepper, if so, add at the last minute.

Interesting Note: Wine does not enhance the flavor of vegetables. In other words, wine and vegetables do not "marry well." In some instances sherry is recommended with mushrooms, but just a little goes a long way. I have tried peas with white wine, recommended to me by a "gourmet," but I did not like them. Wine in soups, meat, chicken and fish dishes, and salads are delectable touches, but please leave it out of your vegetables.

Cauliflower

This is another wonderful vegetable to serve whole as a first course, but you can do this only when the cauliflower is huge and beautiful. Select the whitest head and core it in a nylon bag until ready to use. Carefully remove the outer leaves leaving all the tiny green leaves. Cut the stem off as closely as possible. Then cut into the stalk, from the bottom up toward the flower, making slices as if you were cutting a pie. This is to allow the heat to go into the stem and cook more quickly. Push the knife into the stem as far as possible but do not over-cut as the head will fall apart.

Into a large kettle put a sheet of foil wrap. This enables you to remove and serve the cauliflower without its breaking. You will need:

1 lemon
3 cups of water
1 teaspoon Beau Monde Seasoning
1 rounded tablespoon sugar

Scatter the sugar in the foil wrap, add water and other seasonings. Squeeze the lemon over the cauliflower and cut two or three slices and arrange over the flower. The rind of the lemon imparts a piquant flavor. Cook for approximately half an hour. Serve on a huge round platter with your favorite sauce. I like a cheese sauce, which I also use on artichokes and broccoli. Serves six.

Herb Potatoes

Potatoes—the tiny new ones, the red kind (called Early Rose)—are so sweet and delicious, if you season them during the cooking period. I cook them in a covered skillet, 1 potato deep, with as little water as possible. Your herbs should be flung in with abandon, for it takes a lot of them to penetrate the peeling. Of course I cook potatoes in the skins and with very little water, but peel them afterward and sear them with cream or butter. The more pungent the herb, the more delicious the potato. Rosemary is so good. The Scandinavians cook their potatoes with masses of fresh dill. (Potatoes with dill are great served with fish.)

Rice Pilaff

I think this is my most successful single vegetable recipe so far as people enjoying it is concerned and also for ease of cookery. You can't make a mistake with it and you really can't ruin it. It has been so admired that one of America's best restaurateurs, Trader Vic, copied it and now serves it in his fabulous place in San Francisco. I serve it with lamb, fish and chicken, using a different liquid for the various meats. Recipe serves eight.

2 cups long-grain rice
1 cups liquid. If serving chicken, cook rice in chicken broth, if serving it with fish use fish or clam broth, etc.

THE 20 BEST VEGETABLE RECIPES

- $\frac{2}{3}$  quarter-pound bar of butter
- $\frac{3}{4}$  cup fine-chopped celery (no strings)
- $\frac{3}{4}$  cup chopped carrots
- $\frac{3}{4}$  cup chopped parsley
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup chopped green onions
- 1 cup nuts (pine nuts, blanched almonds, etc.)

There are two secrets to the success of this dish. One, the casserole must be hot. Second, the liquid must be really bubbling before it goes over the rice. Pop an empty iron casserole into the oven, have the stock boiling, then start your rice. (I use M. J. B., long-grain rice, that says in large letters, Do not wash. None of this washing rice for me, it takes too much time.) Into a large Revere skillet, put the butter and have the heat high. When the butter is good and hot, put in the rice and stir constantly, until all the rice is well coated with butter and it is very hot to the touch. The rice will be lightly browned. (This takes about 5 minutes.) Remove from fire, get the casserole from the oven, pour in the rice and butter, then add the boiling broth. Put the cover back on and put into the oven which should be 375° F. Cook for half an hour, take out and add chopped vegetables and nuts, stirring and mixing in well. I think this is what makes the rice so light and fluffy. I do this stirring in the chopped vegetables with a fork. Return to the oven for half an hour.

If you have any left over, you can stir well with a fork and re-heat. It is just as good the next day.

Incidentally, the broth must be highly seasoned and, if you have a chicken broth that is not flavorful enough, add a tablespoon of chicken concentrate. (I use Sey-Co's.)

Celery Root

- 4 celery root
- 1 inch of water in the pan

Wash celery root with the stainless steel sponge and trim the top, cook for a scant half hour. The root should be underdone. Pour off the hot water and run cold water over all immediately, to cool quickly. Store in the refrigerator in container that you cooked the roots in until ready to use. These can be cooked the day before using. The day you plan to use them, peel the roots and then slice them in julienne fashion, long slender sticks, mix with a well-seasoned mayonnaise. I use Drew's

French Mayonnaise, San Diego, California, with mustard, shallots, Beau Monde seasoning powder and cream added. Chopped parsley adds to the appearance. This can be mixed ahead of time, at least two hours in advance of using. Serves eight.

Glamour Potatoes

Potatoes should be all the same size; I pick mine out very carefully. (Here I go again talking about the selection of size. But if the French and Chinese worry about uniform size, I guess I can do it too.)

Wash them well and use the stainless steel sponge and rub off all dirt. Slice thinly with a vegetable slicer. Have your container heating with a generous amount of butter in a 375° F. oven. Also have some butter melting on the top of the stove, for butter makes these potatoes dreamy. When all the potatoes are sliced (allow one small one per person), get the casserole out of the oven (I use flat Desco Ware casseroles.) Arrange the potatoes very carefully in rows that touch each other, each slice half overlapping the next slice. You want to have a soft and a crispy textured potato all in the same slice. The part that is covered by the next slice is soft and yummy, while the other half of the slice uppermost is brown and crispy. After all the potatoes are arranged (single layer, please!) cover generously with melted butter, sprinkle Spice Islands shredded green onions over the top for color and taste appeal. Bake in a 375° F. oven for 20 minutes. Increase heat last five minutes to crisp the tops of the potatoes.

Tomatoes Provençal

Allow one tomato per person. Select all the same size tomatoes. (Here I go again!) The reddest, shiniest tomatoes are the best, for they are most likely to be vine-ripened. Allow 1 heaping tablespoon of bread crumbs for each tomato half.

Butter a flat casserole well. Wash and core tomatoes to prepare. Arrange halves of tomatoes carefully. Mix bread crumbs with brown sugar, allowing half a teaspoon for each half of tomato. Put some shallots or green onions through the garlic press and mix well. Add pepper and salt and melted butter, allowing one pat for each tomato half. The more tomatoes you have, the longer it takes to cook. The tomatoes should be done to a very soft tenderness, but not mushy. And they should retain their shape. A 300° F. oven is good.

After arranging the tomatoes carefully, put on a generous amount of the bread-crumbs mixture, covering each half with care. If, in the middle of the cooking period, you think they need more butter, add it. (Sometimes I think I am "butter nuts," but it is a mighty good item for cooking.)

I LIKE to keep spiced vinegars on hand to use in making dressings for vegetable salads so nothing but oil needs to be added. Here are two ways I pre-spice vinegars:

- 2 cups malt vinegar
- $\frac{1}{2}$  rounded teaspoon black pepper corn
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon whole white pepper corn
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon mustard seed
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon dill weed (Spice Islands)
- $\frac{1}{4}$  teaspoon celery seed
- 1 tiny, sweet red pepper
- 1 teaspoon finely chopped crystallized ginger (Spice Islands)
- 6 teaspoons pickling spices
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup of water
- 6 teaspoons honey

Simmer for five minutes, cool and keep in the original vinegar bottle.

I vary this by substituting cider vinegar for malt, and 5 tablespoons of brown sugar for the honey.

Use these vinegars for salad dressings adding only oil, salt, pepper and Beau Monde to taste. I use the classic proportions of 1 part vinegar to 2 parts oil.

Mayonnaise Dressing

- 1 heaping cup of any commercial mayonnaise
- 1 large egg yolk
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup half and half (milk and cream)
- 1 teaspoon Beau Monde seasoning
- $\frac{1}{4}$  teaspoon mustard
- $\frac{1}{8}$  teaspoon cracked pepper
- 3 tablespoons spiced vinegar (recipe above)
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon curry powder (this is optional)

Mix cream and egg yolk with mayonnaise. Add dry ingredients. Then slowly add vinegar and oil, stirring well.

This dressing is excellent for cold broccoli, artichokes, asparagus, or Brussels sprouts.

Children ride bikes whether their parents do or not, so when the family rides together, cycling takes on the status of a family enterprise.

Within the family some will excel on one count and some on another.

In our own family, ages range from seven to forty-five, and there is considerable difference in cycling ability. Best cyclist is our thirteen-year-old. He is slight but strong, and he takes his cycling seriously. He uses drop handlebars, toe-clips, a racing seat and derailleur gears. He will go to any end to eliminate an ounce of excess weight from his equipment, talks earnestly of butted tubing and frame sizes, and lectures us all on pedaling technique.

Next best is our eight-year-old, with a pair of short husky legs that apparently never wear out and a determination that keeps him grinding away up the hills long after the rest of us have gotten off to hush. "And I never got off my bike once," is his summary of a perfect bicycle trip.

I myself am the weak link in our family cycling chain. I am what is politely known to the trade as a "conservative rider," which means that I sit bolt upright, take no chances, and put comfort before all other considerations in choosing my equipment. I am not the athletic type. Coasting down a steep hill, while the rest of the family shrieks happily, I hang on with sweating palms, knowing that if I walk it, I'll earn a jeering "Chicken!"

But a family is more generous to its backward members than you'd think. And there are obvious advantages to a family hobby in which children can sometimes excel over their parents.

Family cycling is not racing and it is not a trial of endurance. It is a simple, healthful and economical means to exploration. Individual differences are lost in the fun of the ride. The important thing is the freshness that we sense in familiar things as we see them in their new light, closely and unhurriedly from our bike seats.

At this spring's motoramas we saw three-hundred-horsepower motors and over-a-hundred-mile speedometers that reflect our generation's worship of the motor and our reaching for speed. But when we're just "out for a drive," how can we enjoy the passing landscape if we zoom by at our new high speed?

Our freeways, built to accommodate all this perfection of transportation, have carried us still farther from enjoyment of the countryside. In recent years, driving on giant highways through the region where I spent my childhood, I complained that all Southern California had become lost in a mass of identical super-shopping centers, gasoline stations and monotonous subdivisions.

But on bicycle tours through this area, keeping to secondary roads, as one does on bikes, we found that the rural and the quiet are still there—the lemon groves with their big ranch houses, and the long stretches of shady road under eucalyptus wind-breaks. Only a few blocks back from the freeway, each orchard still has its fruit-stand beside the road, and the open fields still have meadowlarks.

There are of course many places, even in so developed a spot as Southern California, where freeways have not drawn their curtain over the landscape. For instance, driving on the main roads of the Ojai Valley, you can still enjoy from your car a peaceful atmosphere of groves, pastures, oaks.

CYCLING brings its own special rewards. From your bicycle, you smell the cleanness of the air, soak up the sunshine, listen to the birds. Your bicycle's pace is a speed for observing and for keeping contact with what you see. On a bike you don't miss the little road that turns up to the winery; and you haven't whirled so far past that it is inconvenient to go back and investigate. When you see a group of boys skipping windfall oranges across a giant arroyo, it is easy and natural to join them for a while and skip a few oranges yourself.

When you are ready to rest, you lean your bike against one of the huge rock walls that honeycomb the valley. An orchard worker, stopping to pass the time of day, tells you that the wall was built long ago by coolie labor when The Ojai was being cleared for homes and planting. He tells you where you can get a drink of water; he suggests you circle to the west to watch the old cider press at work.

People are very accessible from a bicycle. They like to tell about their local lore and give advice about roads and points of interest. They want to look over your cycling equipment; and they are generous with a glass of milk, a place to rest. The friendliness people show for a group of cyclists out on the road provides a bridge to one of cycling's greatest rewards—an ever-growing acquaintance with our own region, both terrain and residents.

THE attractions of cycling are many. Even considering the development of the automobile, it is surprising that there should be relatively fewer adult American cyclists now than there were fifty years ago. Abroad, cycling is more popular than in our own country. Because of shorter distances, fewer cars, economy, a more leisurely outlook—the bicycle is widely used in many countries as convenient transportation and for the pleasure tour. In England, trains running to the country have special provision for hanging the bicycles of excursionists. Countries like Holland and Denmark, where there is a bicycle for every two inhabitants, have cycling lanes in connection with their highway systems so that cyclists need not compete with motor traffic.

Dr. Paul Dudley White's recent statement that as a preventive against heart disease he "would like to put everybody on bicycles . . . not once in a while, but regularly as a routine," may contribute to increased cycling interest among adults in our own country. If so, we can look for a spread of bicycle touring clubs and a rash of family cyclists on our secondary roads.

Dodging through city traffic on your bike is possible, but not much fun. Cyclists who live in large cities need some way of getting themselves and their bikes into an appropriate area. For a family the size of ours, this takes some doing and means the use of pick-up or trailer. But smaller families can accommodate their bicycle equipment on the family car with the use of bike racks.

Although children will ride their bikes whether their parents ride with them or not, when the whole family rides together as a hobby, cycling takes on the status of a sport with its own criteria of skill. Then the children begin to look on themselves as "cyclists" rather than as bike riders. They take pleasure in perfecting their "duck paddle" technique of pedaling. They become conscious of what it means to "sit right." They compare notes on how correct use of gears can economize their effort. The constant informal conversation that surrounds any family activity extends their thinking to such matters as frame angles and the importance of correct ratio in locating their seats, handle-bars and pedals.

The new focus on skill and form leads to understanding the purpose behind a bicycle's design. The bicycle is a perfect example of form following function, and this has been true from the first Safety Bicycles of 1880. At Dearborn Museum, seeing the graceful bicycles the Wright brothers made before the turn of the century, we realized that the ideal of the bicycle craftsman has not changed. The finer the bicycle, the more simple and spare it is.

CHILDREN choosing their first bikes usually go for something fat-tired and covered with gadgets. As their appreciation grows, sooner or later they get the fever to own a really first-class specimen of the bicycle-maker's art—light and strong, simple in every detail of its equipment, and with suitable frame-size and gears.

In our family the bicycle has been the best of all incentives for working and saving. Our oldest boy earned his first full-sized bike by selling eighty sets of combs. I believe no other goal could have had quite the sustaining power through his weeks of knocking on doors and writing sales letters, or have furnished quite the thrill of fulfillment he got when the crate at last came off his shiny red bike.

We were so impressed with this experience that we announced in our family an agreement to match any sum earned and saved toward a bike. Each of our children in turn has taken advantage of the offer. Now we are working on the same basis toward our second round of bicycles. This time we will know how to select the very finest of equipment.

Two of our members have already reached their goal. The rest of us know that before we can qualify for first-class bicycles, we must not only save the price, but also must prove that we know how to use good equipment and that we are capable of giving it the care it deserves.

We protect our bicycles from weather, refrain from leaving them thrown down or behind parked cars, and we also give them the frequent mechanical attention they need. Because, though a bicycle is a simple and dependable mechanism, it needs constant adjustment. Brakes and gears must be attended to and the oil-can routinely used. Tires, bolts and spokes need to be kept in good working condition.

Adolescents have an urge toward mechanical tinkering and perfecting which finds an outlet in this kind of puttering. And, if they are not naturally methodical in their attentions to their cycling equipment, they may learn to be. Because if they aren't, the fruit of their own neglect is their own immediate inconvenience.

Learning rules of safety and courtesy on the road is a must for all cyclists. We have to accept responsibility for not slowing motor traffic or causing accidents. We ride single-file, close enough together to keep contact within our group. Each has his established position in the file. First man is map man and sets our pace, providing opportunity for frequent conferences. Last man wears a whistle and serves as sheep dog.

In line with our safety goals we wear red and white clothes for visibility. For cycling comfort we keep the clothing as light and wind-proof as possible. Nylon moisture-repellent jackets are good, and most of us keep billed caps with ear-flaps handy.

On tours we eat often to keep our energy level up. We take frequent rests. We intersperse pedaling with occasional walking periods. So far, on trips that include the whole family, we have not exceeded thirty miles in any one day; but we can make our thirty miles without difficulty. My own flesh may weaken on the home stretch, but no one else is taxed. Even our seven-year-old, when asked if he's getting tired, inquires, "Tired of what?"

A call for those interested in a bicycle trip meets enthusiastic response from us all. Once on our bikes, the magic of their wheels carries us into a world where, cloudy or blue, the sky sets the only limit to adventure. As we skim silently along on our "poor man's yachts," strain and tension slide away; and we refresh ourselves with quiet hours of companionship, motion and the out-of-doors.

A MARQUESA WHO COOKS FOR A LIVING

composed—and then it writes itself, when you sit down with a pen.

Lastly, there is something a wife and mother can contribute to family serenity whose name I do not know. I do know it exists and I try to practice it. Let me give you a true example, since I cannot put a word to it.

I have a friend married to a fine, prominent official who earns a handsome salary in the United States; they have two children. She decided to go back to work and, with her salary, hire a maid and a cook. Within a short time it seemed that both the children could not be out of bed at the same time. They suffered a continuous round of boils, aches, colds and crying jags. Her husband returned from his exacting day to a yowling clinic, which made him progressively more haggard. Finally, my friend plunged. She quit her job, fired the maid and the cook and took over. Her house is neasier than she likes; her cooking is indifferent; but the boils and aches and colds have stopped, is no doctor could stop them. Her husband is serene. And she has time to embroider again.

Let me give you another true example, my own.

My life has been a fairy tale in reverse. As a young woman I became a Marquesa. Now I am a cook, an inn-keeper, a woman whose aim is to spoil my guests.

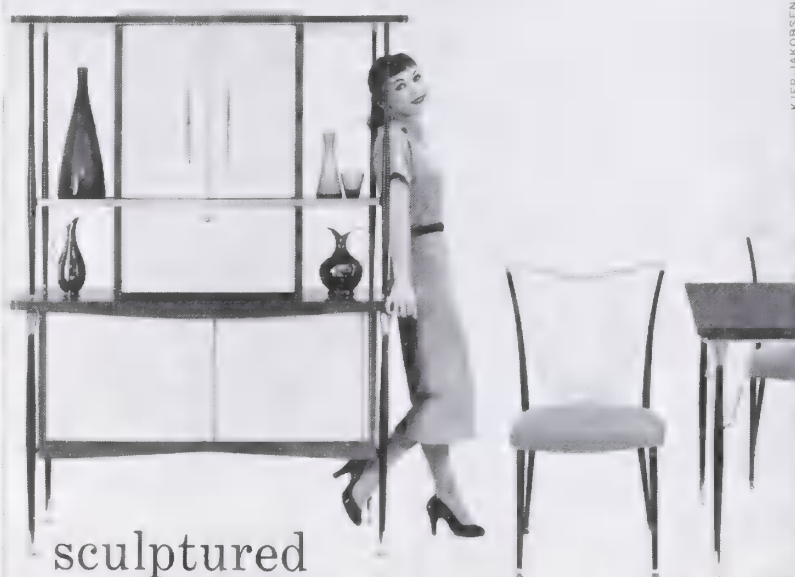

But don't think I am an unhappy woman. As many men kiss my hand now as before, a hand somewhat reddened and often crisscrossed by band-aids where a knife has nicked or a burn blistered. These are my battle scars and I'm proud of them. I know as many admirals and generals, writers and movie stars, diplomats and bankers as ever I did. They come to my table with their wives and children as my guests as they did before; there's only one difference—a bill before they leave. They seem to like it, for they keep coming back.

I'm independent. I can swim in my own pool every day I please. Fifty people for lunch bother me less than twelve did a few years ago and, while I don't say it myself, my friends claim that I serve the very best table in Mexico.

A MARQUESA WHO COOKS FOR A LIVING

My fairy-tale-in-reverse upset happened about three years ago and to understand it requires some background. My husband is José Maria Carles-Tolrá, Marques de Castellar. The title of Marques is the second highest rank of nobility in Spain, topped only by the Dukes and the Princes of the Royal House. My own family is not noble; my father was professor of international law at the University of Barcelona and my mother came from a family of country squires; we are a family of professionals, artists and businessmen. My husband and I were married in 1937 in Paris, where I was working at the Spanish Embassy.

We had traveled a great deal—to France, to Argentina, to the United States, to England, to Portugal—frequently in the company of my father-in-law who was a real gourmet and who taught me a great deal about cooking. Eventually, we decided to live in Cuernavaca, Mexico, where houses are as big as palaces. This put before me squarely the problem: How could I maintain and run a Cuernavaca house on our small income?

As every woman knows, a house is not compressible. I had eleven bedrooms and baths, two acres of garden with duck pond and chickens, a swimming pool, sitting rooms, verandahs, garages, servants' quarters—a seigniorial mansion in truth—that requires about ten servants to handle properly. Maintenance alone of such a place requires money. One thousand dollars a month is a minimum to keep it in shape and I could count on less than half that. What to do? I decided to take paying guests.

IF PARADISE is a physical place, as Milton thought it was, Cuernavaca would come very close. Here is a perfect climate. Warm blue skies in the day time, cool at night to let you sleep. The bougainvillea spill over in magic profusion to decorate even the humblest stone wall with their magentas and imperial purples. Flowers are all around us—so much so that Cuernavaca is known for its fine honeys.

In this near-Paradise I controlled an enormous house. From my bedroom window and from the garden we delight in Mexico's extinct twin volcanoes: Popocatepetl and the sleeping Ixtacihuatl. My swimming pool is as blue as the sky after rain. My dining table seats eighteen. The frontage on the garden has a seven-arched verandah, festooned with blue-flowered, bell-flowered climbing Francisea.

In addition, Cuernavaca is only an hour's drive from Mexico City on the splendid toll-highway. And it is not only fashionable but necessary for many people to get away from Mexico City's altitude once in a while, to rest here—for we are 1,500 feet lower than the capital.

I put together the will and the assets and I was in business. I let it be known among my friends that I would welcome paying guests. I myself would supervise the kitchen.

The customers were only a trickle at first. But my friends stood by me loyally, passing the word along to their friends in turn. "Why not spend the week end at Rosa's?" became a kind of refrain sandwiched between cocktails. "You look peaked. A week at Rosa's in Cuernavaca . . ." And so my guest list grew. My third season, just ended, has kept my house full from Sunday to Sunday. Dogs and children crisscrossed the garden; grown-ups toasting their shanks alongside the swimming pool caught up on their reading, played cards and music—and ate as I never realized people could eat. I have built two detached bungalows, my flock of chickens has doubled, we have expanded the rabbit pens, the ducks parade their fluffy yellow offspring and one of the geese has laid an egg!

I am happy again. I am happy being a woman, a successful woman, who is proud of her home, her family, her guests, her household.

My inner womanly philosophy, if that is the right way to say it, tells me that to make up for the fast modern pace people need to be spoiled. Especially Americans and Canadians, who make up more than half my guests. Maybe not spoiled altogether, but spoiled a little bit anyhow. So I do my best to spoil them a little at Casa de Piedra. I have been reading about how hard American men work and how many widows they leave, because they work too hard. Maybe if American women would spoil their husbands more, and make them work less, they could keep them longer. The same goes for the divorce rate. My advice to American women would be—spoil your husbands so much that no other women will be able to tolerate them.

Only half jokingly, some of my stricter friends twit me for showing the Arab strain, saying that Spanish women believe in making minor sultans of their men. It does wonders for the overstrained executives, and it really takes so little to do. Recently, a woman stockbroker came to me badly underweight with jumpy nerves. A glass of milk now and then, finding the ripe mangoes she raved about, making the special desserts she liked made a new woman of her—and presumably a bull in the market—within a month. (I just heard she got married!)

OR TAKE the case of the two radio network executives. After doing whatever it is that radio executives do to ruin their tempers and their livers, they came to me for a long week end. They arrived on a coldish day, just in time for a short swim before lunch. As they came out of the pool I met them with a double Bacardi daiquiri in each hand. You would have thought I was handing them manna. Without apologies to their wives, they got the most thorough spoiling all week end of which I was capable and which seemed to me to be just what they needed. If radio in the United States has improved as much as they did personally, somebody owes me a sponsor. At any rate, one of these executives listed my asparagus mousse as one of the three wonders of Mexico, coupled together with the great TV center and Popocatepetl.

My guests are an international smorgasbord. On Saturdays and Sundays especially, the company in my house and garden is likely to strike an unwarned observer as strictly screwball. For one thing, there is no agreed language in which to communicate. A bronzed Canadian giant, who will be glad to repair a damaged eyeball when back in his surgery, mangles high-school French entertaining a petite Roman lady. An Austrian movie producer tells outrageous melodramas, switching from English to French to Spanish with the ease of a flashback, fracturing each language beyond a grammarian's recall. Several languages may contribute to a single sentence. I once heard one of my guests commenting on a competitor: On dit que le food esta muy down.

A MINOR feature is an invention of my own. In Mexico everyone who possibly can, takes a siesta after lunch. The siesta is a custom which has been going on for a long time but which too few Americans know anything about. I figured the siesta needed wider use. For honey-mooners and others who really need a rest, I prescribe a siesta after breakfast. It does wonders for duodenal ulcers, high blood pressure and sinusitis.

Because so many wonderful Canadians escaped from their snows and ices last winter to stay with me, Casa de Piedra was for a time known as The Canadian Club. Others have dubbed this house the Cuernavaca-Swimming-Cooking-and-Siesta-Society. Call it what you will, my idea is that people shall, for a change, be freed from slavery to the alarm clock and the supermarket and do as they please.

As for me, it does something for my morale to be able to wear a Hoover apron over my bathing suit and choose my own time for a dip between sauce and soufflé.

I've proved that the "womanly arts," as you call them, are as good for business as they are for one's own family. And anyway, I enjoy them so very much!

THE DILEMMA OF MODERN WOMAN

yesterday's suffragette movement.

2. Outside thought pressures. Advertising, magazine articles and community demands tend to make women motivated by fear, dissatisfaction and "should" compulsions, instead of by their own personal evaluations and philosophy.

3. Failure to keep up with technical advances pertaining to women's work. We haven't digested all the enormous changes and advances that have come into being for us to use. We have failed to develop as strong, purposeful individuals.

4. Change in family relationships. The family of today is a single entity. Generally there are few grandparents and aunts and cousins near by to depend on. Couples tend to live far away from their parents, in many cases, and group together in communities made up of only their own generation.

5. Pressures of a new economy. We have practically no unemployment, so help is scarce and expensive. Everything costs too much. Some of us have to learn to live in houses half the size we used to. But we are still guided by former social signposts and value-concepts.

Five points for women to consider in an effort to better their approach to life

1. Good organization. Learning to streamline housekeeping methods and develop a simple but workable outline, employing to the best advantage all available aids.

2. Being selective. Learning to exercise our rights as individuals to become more discriminating and thoughtful about the way we shape our lives and the responsibilities we undertake. Learning to ask of everything, "Is this something I truly want to have or do or care for? Is it necessary? Am I being pressured to be on too many committees, to work for too many fund-raising drives?"

3. Better communication. Learning to understand and appreciate the people around us, to establish intelligent and constructive relationships which will help us to be broader and more aware of the needs of others. The great importance of honest, thoughtful and constant communication between married partners.

4. Personal Identity. Learning more about the need to be a whole person, instead of a family convenience. The more this need is fulfilled, the easier the whole job becomes. Doing something creative can be helpful here.

5. Forget the idea you have a harder time than your husband. You don't! Your man, if he's getting along in the business world, has terrific daily pressures too. Even if they don't seem like pressures to you, they are very real and very wearing. Business is loaded with frustrations, animosities, jealousies, pressures "to beat last year's figures," too many phone calls, straining to remember all the quirks of a customer and of the boss, interruptions that keep your husband from getting the work done. Not enough women understand the needs and problems of their husbands' jobs. They are inclined to think their husbands have a Roman holiday every day, while they stay home and drudge. What all of this adds up to (for all of us, men and women) is to do what we have to do, the very best way we can and learn to have respect for every member of the family.

STREAMLINING THE ART OF QUILTING

the simplest of mediums. Unfortunately, quilting has become an almost lost art, and that is where you come in. This has happened because the patterns have become stereotyped and repetitive. Therein lies your challenge—to give quilting a new look.

Quilting is a wholly feminine creation. It has long been woman's expression. So it should be as up-to-date as woman today. Let it mirror her surroundings, sentiments and sensitivities. One can tell stories in quilts. One can write poetry in quilts. One can paint in quilts. Truly one can almost weave dreams into quilts.

But YOU do it! And don't copy Grandma.

This is no sniff at the old-time patchwork, mind you. The early American housewives were, above all, practical, but even then their imaginative flair sometimes came through. Their long hours of intricate needlework showed up in the form of minute stitches, done on highly skilled and ingeniously organized geometric patterns.

These women were sensitive recorders of the ceremonial life of their households, their farms, their towns. The ever recurring cycles and festivals of life were the perceptive points of their needles. Quilts were the reflections of their daily lives, their holidays and their celebrations.

These past masterpieces of quilting with their rare and lovely harmonious combinations hold an honored place among our heirlooms, but they do not and cannot speak for us here and now. We have new fabrics, new color palettes, new exciting threads, like Lurex, with which to play. We have new kinds of meaning in our lives and also new ceremonials that we prefer to honor.

TO BE sure, the basic quilting formula remains the same. The essential nature of quilting is that it consists of two thicknesses of material which are stitched together and made effective with a padding of some downy material between the layers. But that should be the only link between yesterday and today.

Never before have the yardage counters overflowed with such a wonderful, endless variety of materials with patterns so smart, textures so rich. Manufacturers of embroideries and the related yarns, threads and rickrack, have created a veritable sewing-room Disneyland, offering every inducement to inspire and excite the more creatively bent quilt-maker.

THREADS themselves have come a long way, making the core of your work easier to handle. Lurex threads, conceived in texture and color to hold the rapt attention of both quilter and beholder, are most dramatic and satisfying to use.

The dye colors in thread are superb. You can get any shading of any color to blend your stitching into your pattern or to make the stitching stand out in bold contrast.

Methods have changed as well as materials. The old "squint" system of threading a needle has been bypassed. The old tedious stitches—wave and zigzag, shell and feather—have made way for streamlined stitching.

To show infinite patience is no longer in itself the goal of the quilter. You will find that a larger and bolder stitch, well placed, can be functional and also add to the pattern. Above all, it very definitely speeds up and simplifies what was once a tedious, even though gratifying, procedure. I use a big darning stitch for almost everything and a hemming stitch for appliqué.

The cumbersome and room-filling frames of old have been supplanted by large wooden or metal hoops for the individual maker. Even a hooked rug frame is readily adaptable for two or more women to use, if they wish to have a "get-together" to make a child's quilt or a quilted throw rug.

The market will soon offer a collapsible quilt frame which can be contained in a very small space, but can also be extended to regulation proportions.

So, if you are eager for a uniquely useful creative occupation, there is much to draw on. The subject for a quilt can be your reflections or your needled comments on present-day events, on seasonal or religious themes. Big days in the family, such as births, weddings, holiday trips and anniversaries, all lend themselves to quilting. And you can have much pleasure in the mere utilization of audacious combinations of fabrics, threads and embroideries.

Thus, you have before you unlimited boundaries and means of expression. You have all the new-found joys of the experimenter. You have countless trimmings to choose from. You can use lace, corduroy, drapery fabrics of all kinds, velveteen, seersucker, taffeta—to name only a few. If these do not mesh with your color scheme, dye can be used. And lots of it!

Dyes are excellent now. They've never been easier to handle, and they're inexpensive. Your own dye combination assures you of a quilt bearing your own unique stamp.

So, with all these means at your disposal, you have no excuses for not plunging right now into this ever so self-satisfying art medium. For themes you can select from an ever wider world. Then there is your own deeply personal inner world to draw on for inspiration.

You can retain all the quaint simplicities of the old and yet, by utilizing all the new devices and supplying modern color and design, you most assuredly can kick up a quilt (to use the vernacular) that will someday be a collector's item. Or, to look at it more practically, you can at least quilt a covering for your grandchildren, for their first rocket ride to the moon.

Here are four hints, based on my several years of quilting:

1. Never use the standardized or conventional. Your designs can be imaginative or they can be real, but should be your own.
2. Modern quilting should be free from too precise a line. Work free-hand instead of in careful, precise, measured elements. Let it be sun-rise-bright, pure in color, decorative in design. Don't be afraid to dye freely to get fresh and really startling effects.
3. Don't worry about making small, invisible stitches. Big, bold embroidery stitches serve the purpose just as well. Don't ruin your eyes; speed up the process, so you can make several in the time Grandma took to make one.
4. Your quilts should be indicative of the present, so that in time they will absorb into themselves rich memories that make for living tradition. Choose the best of all that has gone before, but also make sure to add your own contribution.

Even if you don't wind up with a collector's item or a museum piece (it cramps your style, if you so aim). I can promise you one thing for certain: You won't need your quilt for a psychiatrist's couch. Quilting is the perfect antidote for boredom, tension, too much time on your hands, neuroses and inertia. Try it and you will find it beats sleeping pills or Arthur Godfrey every time.

HOW WE POUR PLASTIC

(see Fig. 3, page 61). Later, when the lantern was hung, ¾" round head screws were screwed through the eyes and into our wooden ceilings, providing a simple method of hanging.

From the hardware store we obtained two sheets of aluminum, 8" wide, and of lengths equal to the circumference of each of the two circular grooves in the base. To prevent the liquid plastic from sticking to the aluminum during casting, we polished the inside faces of the metal to a mirrorlike surface. A sheet-metal shop rolled the two sheets into cylinders of the proper diameter. You could have this whole process done for you at your sheet-metal shop, but be sure to have the cylinders very smooth and free of creases or dents, since the plastic will take the exact form of the mold.

NEXT WE taped the joining edges of our cylinders on their outer faces with 1" wide Scotch Tape (see Fig. 4). Before placing the cylinders into the grooves, a thick coating of heavy-duty paste floor wax was applied to the base area between the grooves, so that the plastic would not stick to the wood.

After placing the cylinders in the grooves, we sealed the joints between them with an auto-body caulking compound obtained from an auto-supply dealer. This step is of great importance, since it guards against leaks occurring during the casting process. So take great care to be sure that you create a complete seal (see Fig. 5).

Now we were ready for the fun. In our lanterns we added to the plastic an aggregate made of broken Coke and wine bottles. When cast into the sides of the lantern, with the clear plastic forming the binder, this broken colored glass created a crystal-like wall through which the light literally danced, casting beautiful shadows across our ceilings.

You might experiment by using other materials for your aggregate. Any kind of colored and broken glass, marble chips, bits of colored plastic, sea shells, leaves or grasses will do; almost anything will do that is beautiful when light passes through it. The only limitation is that the aggregate must be small enough to be dropped between the cylindrical walls of the form.

The plastic resin we used was "Polylite 8001," manufactured by Reichhold Chemicals, Inc., 525 North Broadway, White Plains, N.Y., and bought directly from the manufacturer. (There are also a number of similar formulations of polyester resins available from local plastic distributing companies and shops which sell boat repair kits. Additional sources are listed at the end of this article. All these liquid, thermosetting resins must be combined with two admixtures: the first, an accelerator; the second, a catalyst or hardener, before they can be properly poured into the mold.

I suggest that you discuss your intentions with your supplier and that you follow carefully the recommendations of the manufacturer in this mixing process. When properly mixed, the plastic will flow into the mold and set up (harden) properly. However, an improper mixture can result in some serious problems, since the setting-up process involves a chemical reaction which causes intense heat to develop in the mold. If you follow the manufacturer's instructions, however, you will have no difficulties.

Use a large glass water pitcher in which to mix the resin. This makes a convenient device for pouring the mixture into the mold (see Fig. 6). Proceed as follows:

1. Pour about 1" of plastic into the bottom of the mold. Now check to be sure that there are no leaks. If any develop, be sure to reinforce the sealer.
2. Drop aggregate into the mold about half way up.
3. Carefully pour in more plastic to within three-fourths of the top, then add enough aggregate to fill the mold.
4. Pour in enough plastic to completely fill the mold evenly at the top of it.

You must now let the plastic set up and harden. Depending upon the mix, the time of hardening will vary. First, the mix will begin to jelly and as this occurs it will slowly warm. Soon it will get hot, so hot in fact that you will not be able to touch the mold. Do not be alarmed at this. Let it cool completely before you remove the sides of the mold. We simply peeled the Scotch Tape off the cylinders and slipped them free. Then we were ready to repeat the process.

When we used the lanterns as light fixtures, we screwed them to the ceilings directly over porcelain light outlets. We had previously glued four small cubes of plastic to the inside edge at the bottom of the lantern (see Fig 7). These little projections supported standard metal diffusing shields, used in commercial spot lighting, which we obtained from a light-fixture dealer.

We have also used our lanterns with candles in various flower and table arrangements and I am planning to make some with solid bottoms for vases. There is no end to the uses and variations this technique of casting plastic resin will open up, once you have mastered the basic steps. I have a number of projects planned, including a paneled entrance light for our car shelter, which our architect has designed for us. And there are various others, too!

Other plastic (polyester resin) casting materials of the same type used by Mrs. Teasdale are available from the following sources:

American Cyanamid Company, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York. Their resin is "Laminac #4116."

Bakelite Company's Resin #206, from Glass Plastics Supply Co., Linden, N. J.; Fiberglass and Chemical Services, Tacoma, Wash.; Herter's Inc., Waseca, Wis.

Barrett Division of Allied Chemical and Dye Corp., 40 Rector St., New York. Their resin is "Plaskon #951."

Celanese Corporation's Marco Division makes similar resins, available from suppliers of boat-covering kits, such as Camolit Industries, Chemical Division, Wilmington, N. C.; Plastiglass Products, West Bradenton, Fla.; Whitehouse Reinforced Plastics, Fort Worth, Tex.; Serv-U-Marine, Cleveland, Ohio; Fleetcraft Marine Sales, Los Angeles, California.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company's "Selectron #5026," from that company in Newark, N. J.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Torrance, Calif.; Detroit, Mich., or St. Louis, Mo.; Rohm & Haas "Paraplex P" resins may be available from Plastics Service, 233 Condor Street, Boston, Mass.; Pacific Plastics Co., 2727 Seventh Avenue South, Seattle, Wash.; Thalco Glass Fiber Products, 765 So. Harvard Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif.; Castolite Co., Woodstock, Ill.; Kristal Kraft, Inc., 420 Tenth St., Palmetto, Florida.

United States Rubber Company's Naugatuck Chemical Division makes "Vibrin #155," available from that company in Detroit, Mich., Chicago, Ill., Gastonia, N. C., Naugatuck, Conn., or Los Angeles, California.

WE CAN'T, obviously, have been everywhere, in every hotel, on every ship or train or plane that he offers his customers. But in this heyday of travel, he couldn't stay in business long if he didn't do a powerful lot of sampling of his own wares. Which is why practically everywhere you go you'll run into travel agents spending their vacations investigating the meals, the beds, the sight-seeing trips, the shops, the transportation and all the other angles of travel which are their stock in trade. And if he is, like the majority of agents in the U. S. and Canada, a member of the American Society of Travel Agents, he more than likely improves his shining leisure hours by taking ASTA's educational courses, which are designed to give him a better understanding of the sociological and cultural background of the world he's selling.

As a member of ASTA he is bound to observe certain standards of professional behavior which that society has set for itself. But he couldn't have become an agent to begin with until he had first been accredited as financially and ethically responsible by the transportation companies and hotels which he, in effect, represents when he sells their services to the public.

He is a business man. And because travel is so much a matter of personal preference and emotional reactions, he is likely to have a keener appreciation of his clients' good will than many another merchant. It is good business for him to extend himself in service and courtesy and individual attention, beguiling you to come back for more when you're getting ready to take your next trip.

But what most people don't understand about the travel agent is that he is a merchant whose livelihood depends almost entirely upon commissions. In the main he receives these from steamship lines, airlines, hotels and travel wholesalers (firms who plan tours, cruises and similar all-expense trips and sell them as a package to the agent who in turn sells them to you). The agent collects his commissions directly from the principals involved and not from you. You pay the going, advertised rate, just as you would if you made your own bookings as an individual, only you're getting free the agents' know-how in booking, his advice and his skill at turning a variety of separate reservations into a co-ordinated, smooth operation.

These commissions, incidentally, vary with companies and the season, but over all they are surprisingly little, as little as 7 per cent from some transportation companies and no higher than 10 per cent from hotels. Domestic railroads and bus lines pay no commission at all on general point-to-point trips, which is the reason why even the most accommodating agent will be somewhat less than overjoyed about a journey that requires no more than a train reservation. For making a train reservation he may therefore legitimately charge you a service fee for his time, thought and telephoning.

Similarly, certain hotels finesse the commission, and so do airlines if the customer insists on charging the fare on a credit card. In these cases, again, you can hardly complain if the agent charges a fee. And if your particular project involves extraordinary telephone calls or cables or messenger services, you will also be expected to pay for them. Fair is fair, and there is no reason why the agent should be giving away his skill and time without some recompense from you.

Time is of extreme importance to the agent, and you will be doing yourself a favor if you realize this when you approach him about your travel plans.

He is, of course, equipped to furnish you with all sorts of suggestions, if you're not exactly certain what you want in a vacation or a trip. But you save him and yourself considerable time and will probably have a better vacation, if you go with some ideas formulated and a willingness to tell him frankly what you do and don't like and how much money you're willing to spend. This last is important, for he can squander a lot of time planning a champagne trip on a beer budget, or vice versa.

If your problem consumes a lot of his attention and involves a lot of suggestions and discards while you make up your mind between Texas and Tahiti, he will be thoroughly justified in charging you a service fee, for he naturally has to turn his back on other potential business while he is plotting a whole group of fruitless itineraries for you.

And if you have any heart at all, don't be a "shopper," the kind of client who gets an agent to slave over an itinerary of vacation arrangements and then goes the rounds of several agents looking for a better price on it. Agents, because they've seen so much of this kind of aggravating customer, can usually spot them after a few words, and so you can imagine the kind of service they feel like supplying. Shoppers usually end up dissatisfied anyway.

The wisest approach is to pick your agent carefully beforehand. The recommendation of satisfied customers is probably the most foolproof gauge. Agents bank heavily on it and are likely to pamper their regular customers with all sorts of pleasant attentions. We've observed agents on their own vacations, investing in Spanish dolls for Mrs. Jones's doll collection, or out with a flash camera at midnight to photograph a night-blooming cereus for Joe Smith's gallery of tropical flowers.

INDEED, once you've got acquainted with your agent, you may find yourself including him or her in that select, very personal circle of those who know the Real You, like your doctor or your decorator. For these are people you get pretty heart-to-heart with. Who else is concerned that Grandma must be met at Idlewild with a wheelchair, or that you need a baby sitter while you're in Rome, or that the man of your house won't set a foot off continental U.S.A. unless he's told where he can get a good Martini in Istanbul?

Of such confidences are beautiful friendships made and, before you know it, you may be buying dolls for the agent's collection or taking pictures for him to show to prospective clients. But, in any event, a good travel agent is your best passport to a fine holiday.

WHAT MAKES A HEAT-PROOF GARDEN?

most easily obtained. The mulch shields soil from much of the sun's heat, thus conserving moisture.

With these soil preparations you can increase the heat tolerance of any plant. By supplying shade and wind protection, the number of different plants which will survive hot weather rises sharply. If they have shelter, much less moisture will be lost by the plants through their leaves.

It pays, too, to be cautious in placing plants near walls or paving which will reflect heat onto the plants and cause wilting or perhaps severe burning of the foliage.

But to be really confident of your garden's capacity to take care of itself in hot weather, selection of the plants themselves should be given careful consideration, too. Often natives are the most durable solution. But don't overlook plants from other areas where the temperature also soars. Your local nurseryman can help determine whether they will succeed in your particular micro-climate.

Keep in mind, too, that illusion can play an important part in hot-weather gardening. A few green, healthy shrubs chosen for the beauty of their foliage create a greater feeling of well-being, especially if they are in light shade, than six times that number of showy flowering plants struggling in the open sun.

If you are thinking about increasing the heat tolerance of your garden, you might consider among your first new plants those which have proved superior in the St. Louis area, where there is seldom more than six inches of rainfall from June 1 to September 30 and where summer daytime temperatures hover in the 90's—a real test of endurance for the usual plants.

Among the trees which do well in this area are: flowering crab, Washington thorn, honey locust, especially the Moraine variety, sweet gum and red and pin oak.

Shrubs include: Pfitzer juniper, yews, Juliane barberry, Euonymus patens, and hollies, all evergreen; and Euonymus alatus, the many viburnums, forsythia, Ilex verticillata, Pyracantha coccinea.

Groundcovers: Baltic and Bulgarian ivy, pachysandra, vinca, Euonymus coloratus.

..because they went to their doctors in time

Many thousands of Americans are being cured of cancer every year. More and more people are going to their doctors in time.

But the tragic fact, our doctors tell us, is that every third cancer death is a needless death... twice as many could be saved.

For the facts of life about cancer, call the American Cancer Society office nearest you or write to "Cancer" in care of your local Post Office.

Use net curtains of coarse mesh in white and turquoise, one over the other, to decorate a summer window. Figure eights of jersey loops and heavy yarn are couched with buttonhole stitch to repeat design of Schumacher print (opposite). Work goes fast, holds nets together. Napkins are embroidered in linen.

If you want to add personal touches to your decorating and like to embroider, where do you start? To be fun, embroidery must go lightning fast and never be boring. If too intricate, your task will seem endless, lose its importance and will never be finished. So try to achieve telling effects with a minimum of work and time. And never choose stitches that turn out to be too complicated.

A good way to begin is to start with a pair of ready-made curtains. Curtains are not expensive and come in an infinite variety of weaves and delectable colors. We selected "Trade Winds" from North American Lace Company for the curtains shown on page 78. They have a vertical stripe weave with a sprinkling of Lurex threads; the straight lines and bars of the net serve as a guide to keep the embroidery even, which is sometimes difficult on a material so open and airy. Staggering the placement of groups of embroidery on the curtains keeps design from being too static.

The block design on these curtains starts with "Jersey Loops," one of Mariska Karasz's discoveries, which she used in her original art piece. These little circlets of cotton jersey look like rings cut from tops of stockings; they come in white, black, and assorted colors, and are sold by the bag at most Woolworth stores. They are used for weaving or crocheting, but Karasz, who sees possibilities for creating texture and interest in the most disparate yarns and materials, saw in them a quick way to make frames for the surface stitches of her art piece. You can readily identify these in the print material, and again in the embroidery close-ups on page 79. They are quickly anchored in place with a button-hole stitch. They give dimension to the boxes of the design, and are easy to work with because they can be stretched into any shape.

Another short cut to summer decorating is to use several pairs of net curtains in different colors and without benefit of any heading or hems. Just turn down fold of net at top of curtains and weave brass rod through mesh. Cut bottoms on a straight line, and use very full. Curtains in bay window on opposite page were done this way in variations of greens and blues.

Embroidery on napkins is another easy way to add a personalized touch to your possessions. Those on page 79 repeat single rectangular motifs of the hand print, are kept small and are filled with compact surface stitching so as not to be impractical in laundering. In addition, they are worked in washable yarns.

Pillow covers (see page 79) can be fun too. Ours are giant enlargements of actual blocks of the print where stitches are so plainly delineated they could be copied outright. Note "detached buttonhole" stitch (on first pillow), which gives appearance of loose knitting, and the one above it, which has rows of chain stitch linked to a flat stitch. Easiest pillow to make is the top one whose design is a simple criss-crossing of diagonal yarns, held in place with buttonhole couching.

All pillow covers are put together with a minimum of sewing, no mitering, no self-welts, no hems. Just fringe two rectangles of linen and put them together with a border of heavy yarns couched down for anchorage. One operation holds the fronts and backs together while furnishing a frame for the surface stitches of the centers. The back may be given a finished look by adding a similar border to cover the stitches of the front border. Or, if you find embroidery easier with only one thickness of fabric to manage, embroider the top side first and blind-stitch together.

For instructions in working a chain stitch, buttonhole couching and detached buttonhole, please turn to page 120.

Embroidered curtains "Trade Winds," those below, "Clipper," both from North American Lace Co., Inc., Philadelphia, Pa. Handprints, "Fair and Square" and "School Figures" and linen for pillows, F. Schumacher, N.Y. Tea plates and cups, Josiah Wedgwood & Sons., Inc., N.Y. Stoneware plate and cup and saucer, below, The Harker Pottery Co., East Liverpool, Ohio. Rubber tile flooring, Robbins Floor Products, Inc., Tuscumbia, Ala.

PAINTINGS: "Late January" by William Palmer, and "Midnight" by Miron Sokole, from Midtown Galleries, New York.

Second Karasz-inspired hand print is "School Figures," an intertwining of penmanship circles that end by looking like figure eights. Put on 36" sailcloth, it is used here as slipcovers for table top, chair seats and backs. From Schumacher, in four color ways.

HOW TO WORK EMBROIDERY INTO YOUR DECORATING

Description of stitches used in embroidery on page 79:

The Chain Stitch: A loop stitch usually worked in a series to resemble a chain. On pillow embroidery, chain loops are separated with a flat stitch.

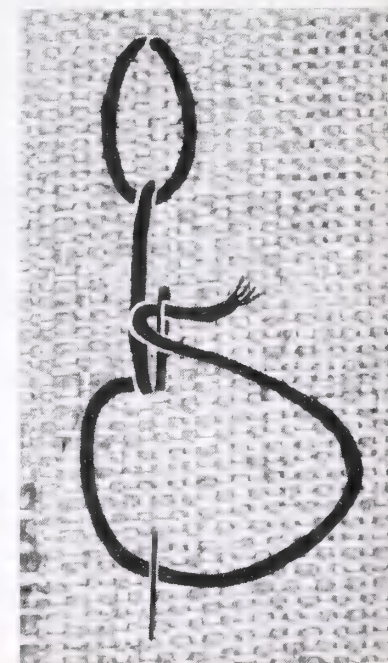

1. Work from top to bottom. Throw thread around first to left, then to right counter-clockwise to make loop, and hold in place with left thumb. Insert needle at point where you started and take vertical downward stitch. After needle emerges from fabric, be sure it crosses slack thread. Pull through.

2. Insert needle about an inch below chain, take up a strand or two of fabric, pointing needle to chain stitch just made. Pull thread through to make flat stitch.

3. Make another chain stitch by re-inserting needle at point where it has just emerged and repeat as in first chain. Alternate these two stitches.

Couching: This is an anchoring stitch worked with a light-weight thread or yarn to hold down yarns or fabrics too heavy to draw through material. Of the many variations, we used the buttonhole couching stitch here to hold down yarns and jersey loops in our embroidery.

1. Starting either right or left of "bar," draw thread down and around to right in a counter-clockwise direction to form loop. Insert needle into fabric under bar, pointing needle into loop. Hold loop down with left thumb, so that needle will pass over it.

2. Continue along length of bar, spacing stitches at desired intervals.

Detached Buttonhole: This is the same stitch as above, except that after first anchoring row, stitch is worked free of fabric.

3. When you reach end of row of buttonhole couching, reverse direction, by drawing thread around to left and insert needle under next-to-the-last buttonhole stitch on bar, so that it points into loop. Do not take up any material. Hold down loop as before. Work across bar.

4. Continue working back and forth to loops of buttonhole on previous row, not taking up any material, but letting your loops be free. To steady edges of work, secure the last and first stitches by putting needle through fabric. By tightening or loosening tension on the thread, your mesh will have either a uniform appearance or varied dimension. Evenness is not a necessity or a virtue with either this stitch or the chain stitch. Let your own fancy direct you.

Dill, to lace tiny new potatoes and other Swedish dishes, traditional in this woman's family.

Lemon verbena, to float in spicy sprigs when lobster makes finger bowls a necessity.

French strawberries—"fraise de bois"—a glorious feast of delicious, tiny berries. The plants double in brass as a runnerless ground cover of dark green.

Grapes, the new French hybrids, another of the double-duty fruits combining summer shade on an egg-crate trellis and autumn fruit, fully as sweet as the grapes from California. Extra dividend: grape leaves for cooking.

Pears, chilled and sliced with cheese, refreshing end to a summer supper out of doors.

Apples, old varieties and new, especially Yellow Delicious, whose fruit should never be subjected to cold storage, and the old-fashioned Yellow Transparent, for the first apples in early summer.

Geraniums, those appealing miniatures with perky flowers above dark foliage rosettes, to grow in pots and play with in endless table and terrace arrangements; temperamental but worth it. The easier-to-grow, scented-leaf geraniums, as pretty to look at as to feel and smell—good for cold drinks and to plant where you'll brush against them! Maxine Kovaleski, an old geranium with the most vivid, clear orange flowers in any garden. Ivy-leaf geraniums, a pink and white cascade on handsome leaves. And, of course, the old standbys, in tempting new forms. Wherever there's a problem, there's a geranium to save the day. Or so it seems to the woman of our story.

Succulents in containers, to use indoors and out, in the window, on the table, wherever their colors and sculptured forms are needed.

Flowering shrubs in every space available, to enjoy outdoors and to cut in extravagant armloads for great bouquets indoors.

Evergreens, useful indoors as well as out when they've grown large enough to be used occasionally for flower and foliage arrangements.

Calendulas, a cheerful challenge to both weeds and early frosts, to follow up a row of early lettuce. Just sow the seeds in its place.

Zinnias, in all the smaller varieties, planted in rows in the vegetable garden and by themselves wherever color is needed. As cut flowers they last a week. For display they're wonderful.

Early flowering tulips, the double varieties, bulbs chilled in the refrigerator so they'll bloom indoors in great potfuls, while the winter weather outside is cold and dreary.

Christmas roses, each year a few of these endearing white flowers with the leathery green leaves for the Christmas dinner table. There is no finer expression of the true holiday spirit, there is nothing lovelier as a centerpiece.

Flowers, always on the breakfast tray or table. In winter a begonia blossom from the window garden, if there's nothing else to offer. In summer, of course, there's the whole outdoors, wild and cultivated from bud to seedpod.

Ferns, to enjoy cool and green after a rain, to arrange on platters beneath fish and salads.

Foliages of all kinds, to wear as distinctive jewelry: parsley in crisp rosettes on summer cottons; plush, peppermint geranium leaves, as furry contrast to a pale pink rose; other geraniums, such as the lacy pine and rose, and tiny strawberry and apple kinds in a cluster on a gray flannel suit. Entirely different is the sculptured beauty of small succulents wired together, or the casual flair of a bright autumn leaf pinned to a tweed suit.

Budded branches, everything from maples to forsythia and quince, to force indoors in January and February for flowers long before the regular season.

And just as real...

A quiet corner, shady and peaceful, but green and growing, a place to escape momentarily from the struggle with the budget or the children's noisy play.

Satisfaction, the kind that comes from bringing richness from the earth, a wholesome feeling of fulfillment as the ancient cycle of seed to seed gives life a bit more meaning and natural rhythm.

Some things an architect can't specify

An architect can build many things into a house—but the real home is up to you to build.

The furnishings you select to complete your home, just like the materials that go into the very foundation of the house, should be chosen with the future in mind. In your selection of tableware, for instance, it is false economy to invest in anything less than fine solid silver. For sterling silver is one purchase you never have to make twice—a precious, yet practical, treasure that will beautify your table and enhance your way of life—forever!

When you do buy sterling, you will be wise to select a pattern by Gorham—the name that has stood for the finest in solid silver for the past 125 years. Not only are there more designs to choose from in Gorham than any other make, but a Gorham pattern carries the assurance that it can be matched or added to even years and years later.

Complete Gorham place-settings (knife, fork, spoon, salad fork, soup spoon and spreader) from $29.75.* Settings for eight in a handsome wood chest, from $238.* And, most authorized Gorham jewelry and department stores have convenient budget plans that give you up to a year to pay.

A Gorham Exclusive... made from a seamless sterling tube, the Gorham knife handle will resist denting if accidentally dropped. It is completely watertight—there are no seams to open or discolor. Washing in the hottest water will not loosen the blade.

LARGE OR SMALL...

YOU GET MORE FOR YOUR MONEY IN A CONCRETE HOUSE

Whatever size or style house you build or buy you'll get more for your money with concrete foundations and floors, concrete masonry walls and a firesafe roof. Such an investment gives you:

MORE BEAUTY. Concrete masonry is available in many textures. It can be laid up in an almost unlimited variety of distinctive patterns and finished, inside and out, in any of a wide choice of attractive colors with durable portland cement paint.

MORE COMFORT. A properly insulated concrete house is comfortable the year around even in severe climates. It is warm and cozy in winter, delightfully cool in summer, snug and dry in all seasons.

MORE PROTECTION. A concrete house gives your family and cherished possessions lifelong protection against the forces that destroy less durable materials. Concrete stands staunch against storms, decay, termites, vermin and fire. Concrete can't burn! With a properly designed basement and a concrete first floor you'll have a safe refuge from tornadoes, hurricanes and atomic blasts!

MORE ECONOMY. Yes, you get more for your money in a concrete house. Its first cost is moderate, it requires less upkeep and fewer repairs and lasts a lifetime. Result: low-annual-cost shelter. Write for a free illustrated booklet on attractive, long-lasting concrete houses. It is distributed only in the United States and Canada.

PORTLAND CEMENT ASSOCIATION

Dept. 9-19, 33 West Grand Avenue, Chicago 10, Illinois

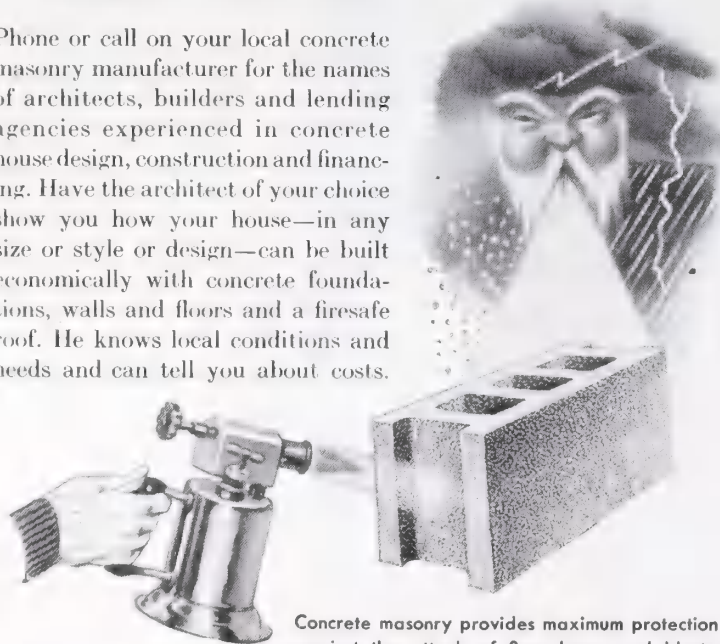

A national organization to improve and extend the uses of portland cement and concrete
... through scientific research and engineering field work

HOW TO GET A SAFE CONCRETE HOUSE

...and what will it cost?

Phone or call on your local concrete masonry manufacturer for the names of architects, builders and lending agencies experienced in concrete house design, construction and financing. Have the architect of your choice show you how your house—in any size or style or design—can be built economically with concrete foundations, walls and floors and a firesafe roof. He knows local conditions and needs and can tell you about costs.

Concrete masonry provides maximum protection against the attack of fire, decay and blasts.

Why you need more than one thermostat in your house

The way you use your rooms

With a separate thermostat controlling the living area, you can adjust the temperature according to your desire. When you're entertaining a large crowd the living room doesn't get too warm. You simply turn down the heat here in the winter or turn up the cooling in the summer.

The sleeping zone thermostat makes it possible to set the temperature there according to use. If the bedroom areas are empty, or if you want cool sleeping, you can adjust this thermostat—and get the lower temperature you want.

The way the weather affects your house

In winter the north wind and southern sun are far more important than most people realize when it comes to making sure your whole house is comfortable.

On a blustery winter day you can turn up the thermostat on the north side of the house and compensate for the chilling effects of the wind.

And when solar heat from the winter sun comes through your windows, the thermostat on the south side will keep sun-drenched rooms from overheating.

The way your house is built

Such features as fireplaces, glass walls, picture windows and the special characteristics of your floor plan present problems which make it impossible for a single thermostat to give you over-all comfort.

Fireplaces add heat you should compensate for. Glass walls and picture windows let in solar heat during the day, are a major source of heat loss at night.

A basement game room, below ground, needs a separate thermostat for real comfort.

The comfort you want

In living area.

No matter whether you're spending a quiet evening at home—or have a house full of company—Honeywell Zone Control keeps the temperature just right.

In sleeping area.

Your children can sleep cool, even in the early evening hours when you want the rest of the house warm for adults.

In recreation area.

Part-time rooms can be kept at low, fuel-saving temperatures when not in use, and made comfortably warm by a finger-tip adjustment of the thermostat when you're entertaining.

Honeywell Zone Control lets you enjoy the heating or cooling you want, when and where you want it.

Your architect or contractor can tell you about zoning for the house you plan to build. To zone your present home, consult your heating dealer.

The Towle Touch...sterling craftsmanship in the grand manner

The Towle Touch is truly the sterling touch. Each Towle pattern is designed to reveal the endearing beauty of the solid silver itself...each piece executed with the authority and restraint, the painstaking perfection of detail that has been the mark of Towle Sterling for centuries.

In the hands of such master silversmiths as the Towle craftsmen, sterling brings to your table a warmth, richness and elegance that cannot be achieved in lesser materials.

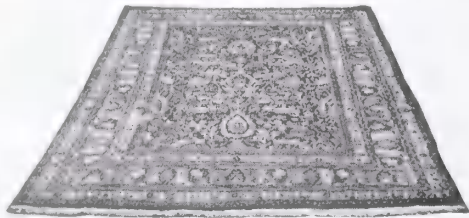

For today, as for centuries, there is no proper substitute for sterling...with its inimitable beauty...its natural "friendliness" in the hand...its ability to adjust instantly to changes in temperature. And, of course, only sterling is clean and tasteless as befits so intimate an implement as tableware.

Towle Sterling...sterling at its loveliest...is available at authorized jewelry and department stores everywhere. 6-pc. place settings from $29.75. Serving pieces from $4.25.

THE SHOES FIT into this excellent shoe bag—all twelve pairs of them! Hang it inside a closet door, on the back of a bedroom door. A prom-trotting college girl will love it for everything from her beat-up saddle shoes to her barest dancing slippers. Heavy-grained plastic in tan, 71" x 20", $5.95 ppd. Downs & Co., Dept. 1179, Evanston, Ill.

PLACE CARD CHAIRS are Tom Thumb copies of the Victorian Ice Cream Parlor chair in white wire, and they're absolutely devastating. The little round seats are covered in assorted pastel velvets. The frames are decorated with tiny nosegays, and your place card fits in a slot at the top. 3 1/2" high, set of 8 is $1 postpaid from Helen Gallagher, 413 Fulton St., Peoria, Illinois.

THIS IS YOUR MOMENT, GIRL, to shine like the star you are in a wool tweed jumper (15% nylon for wonderful washing). Rosewood, gray or cedar-brown with velvet-bowed Empire bodice and globe-circling skirt; sizes 7-15, $8.95. Also in gray wool flannel, $8.95; turquoise or red corduroy, $7.95. Add 25¢ post. White or oxford cotton knit turtle neck shirt. S, M, L, $2.95. Gilchrist's, Box 912, Boston 3.

LOLLIPOP PENCILS, Wow!

We don't know whether sucking on a raspberry or lemon lollipop will make the 7-x-table seem any easier, but we sure would be willing to give it a try! ## HAREM SLIPPERS PUT AN EXOTIC LOOK UNDERFOOT!

These clever Harem Slippers are exotic to look at, fun to wear, and oh, so comfortable! Made of bright-patterned Persian print cotton, Harem Slippers have kitten-soft suede soles—foam rubber inner soles with double thickness in heels. Toes take an "oriental" tilt and six bright gilt coins tinkle from the bow ties. Harem Slippers look delightfully frivolous, but are so really practical—long-wearing and completely washable. And what a clever idea for a really different back-to-college gift!

THE KITCHEN PRAYER

Lord of all pots and pans and things, since I've not time to be A saint by doing lovely things or watching late with Thee
Or dreaming in the dawn light or storming Heaven's gates
Make me a saint by getting meals and washing up the plates.
Although I must have Martha's hands, I have a Mary mind
And when I black the boots and shoes,
Thy sandals, Lord, I find.
I think of how they trod the earth, what time I scrub the floor Accept this meditation Lord, I haven't time for more.
Warm all the kitchen with Thy love, and light it with Thy peace Forgive me all my worrying and make my grumbling cease.

Thou who didst love to give men food, in room or by the sea
Accept this service that I do, I do it unto Thee.

ORGANIZE AND GLAMORIZE WITH THE FILE-DRAWER TABLE

Why buy an ordinary end table... when you can get this handsome piece of furniture that doubles as a file chest, too! Now you can keep your important papers as orderly as a corporation's... in a drawer deep enough for standard alphabetical guide and long enough to store the accumulation of years. Hand-made with brass hardware. Drawers are dovetailed and set in hardwood rails. The inspired touch for your Early American OR contemporary home... the gift your efficient friend (or husband) will adore you for.

CLOWN SHARPENER. We've never seen anything quite like this before. And certainly we've never seen anything that so fills the bill for lots of early Christmas presents. The fat little Funny Man screws onto the wall or desk; the pencil fits into a hole in his tummy; and a turn of the crank sharpens it. $1 ppd. Bryn Mawr Gifts, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

PETTICOAT FEVER. As pretty as a fourteen-year-old, flushed and fragrant from her bedtime bath, this lamp belongs on her dressing table. A wash basin and pitcher lamp of white crackle ceramic has a white flounced petticoat shade that is banded with red embroidered hearts. Basin and pitcher are one unit. 15" high. $9.95 plus $1 shipping charge. Lillian Shoppe, 20 Armat St., Philadelphia 44, Pa.

TRY A LITTLE TENDERNESS next time your husband broils a choice sirloin outdoors, and taste the savory difference when you prepare it with Herb Meat Tenderizer. Until now you may have thought good cuts didn't require tenderizers, but try this spectacular blend of 9 different herbs and see how wrong you've been! 5-oz. jar. $1 ppd. Anderson Farm, Tinicum, Pa.

OF A DESERT CANYON

Imagine your bathroom with the soft, warm tones of a desert canyon, ranging from light cream to deep, stone-brown. Add walls of subdued yellow, accessories of blue-green, and you have a bathroom your family will enjoy and your friends will admire for years to come.

Like Nature's subtle shades, Beautyware fixture colors readily lend themselves to many delightfully different decorative treatments.

And Beautyware fixtures include such practical features as safety bathtub, stain-proof finishes, and trouble-free fittings.

In every way, your choice of Briggs Beautyware will reflect your good taste in bathroom fixtures—and will provide you with an unusual opportunity for fresh, new bathroom color styling.

"CERAMIC TILE MAKES THE DIFFERENCE... EASY TO WORK WITH...RELAXING TO LIVE WITH..."

Huson Jackson

To help create a warm, functional kitchen, Architect Huson Jackson used ceramic tile . . . and captured this rare combination for work-free convenience and relaxed living.

The semi-separation of the breakfast area—to the right of the ceramic tiled cooking island—affords a pleasant place for eating and relaxation. In the kitchen section an aqua tone ceramic tile wall from floor to ceiling keynotes an easily cleaned, colorful work center. The tiled counter tops and drainboards guarantee lifelong service and economy. Why? Ceramic tile won't burn, scratch or stain!

A ceramic tile floor is used throughout—linking kitchen and outdoor patio into a single expansive living space when the sliding window wall is open. No waxing here! Still another work-saving, wife-saving feature of tile. But why not see your local tile contractor soon—he'll tell you about ceramic tile applications for your home.

IMPORTANT: When building or remodeling, ask your ceramic tile contractor about the new adhesive method for installing ceramic tile. It can save you money. And be sure to see the wide range of colors, too!

Get ceramic tile remodeling and new construction ideas from the colorful new brochure "Ideas Unlimited" . . . plus a folder on ideas used in Huson Jackson's design. Both for 10¢. Write to Tile Council of America, Dept. HB-9, Room 3401, 10 East 40th Street, New York; or Dept. HB-9, Room 933, 727 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, California.

the world's finest insulating glass

"TWINDOW"

- Keeps your rooms better insulated winter and summer
  - Saves you money on heating and cooling
  - Helps prevent fogged-up windows
- Works like storm sash—with less trouble    ▪ Muffles outside noises
  - Comes in 2 types—and in a wide range of sizes

The remarkable insulating properties of Twindow — the twin-glass windowpane with insulation built in—enable you to enjoy the outdoors from indoors in greater comfort. For Twindow keeps your rooms warmer in winter . . . and cooler in summer.

With Twindow, therefore, your heating and cooling bills are lower. You have more usable space in your rooms, because cold air downdrafts are minimized and you can sit closer to windows without discomfort. Fogging on the room-side glass surface is reduced. Outside noises are muffled. And since Twindow is a permanent installation, you no longer have to bother with storm windows, with the labor of putting them up in the fall and taking them down in the spring.

Whether you are building, buying or remodeling a home, give Twindow first consideration. You will be rewarded by greater "at home" comfort and pleasure. Surprisingly enough, in most areas, the cost of Twindow all-year insulation will be no more than that of single-pane windows plus storm sash.

Our free book on this amazing twin-glass insulating unit will unfold to you a new conception in gracious, comfortable living. Send for your copy now!

WARMER ROOMS. Twindow's extraordinary insulation properties seal out cold air in the winter, keep your rooms comfortable and healthful.

COOLER ROOMS. Similarly, Twindow's amazing insulation value cuts down on the amount of outdoor heat entering your rooms in hot weather.

TWO TYPES OF TWINDOW®

METAL EDGE. Recommended for large windows and where maximum insulation is needed most. Constructed of two panes of  $\frac{1}{4}$ " clear-vision Plate Glass, with a  $\frac{1}{2}$ " air-space between. Exclusive stainless steel frame means no bare edges to chip or mar. These units are sturdy and beautiful.

ALL-GLASS SEALED EDGE. Precision fabrication, smooth, all-glass edge, high insulating value make this the favorite for smaller window openings in every room. Constructed of two panes of  $\frac{1}{4}$ " Pennvernon — "the quality window glass"—with a  $\frac{3}{16}$ " air-space between. Moderately priced.

FREE BOOK. Consult your architect or builder. They have full information about Twindow and about the various types of sash in which it can be used. Right now, though, we suggest you fill in and return this coupon for the very revealing story on Twindow and what it can do for you.

SCULPTURE AND POETRY

Probably the best description of these two new horse models is that they are "pure poetry"—sculptured in wood. Alone or together, each has its own special "personality" almost alive in the feeling it creates. Like my other sculptures they are cut from selected walnut, modeled with great care and given a high wax polish.

HOW TO SOLVE COMMON PROBLEMS IN PAINTING

Haven't you, after frustrating hours of painting, wished a professional painter would explain to you why your picture went wrong and show you how to fix it? Haven't you felt the need to understand the basic painting principles involved, so you'd never make the same mistake again? This kind of professional help is now available.

The faculty of the Famous Artists Schools have analyzed the work of thousands. They've learned that certain problems crop up again and again. And they've organized their findings into a valuable, instructive booklet. Problems such as you yourself might be facing are illustrated in full size. In simple words and straightforward diagrammatic drawings, you are shown how a professional artist solves each problem.

Valuable Booklet Offered FREE

We think you'll agree this booklet contains far more practical help than many books you may have purchased. Yet the Famous Artists Schools will send it to you free to acquaint you with their unique teaching method. There are no strings attached to the offer. The booklet is indeed FREE. To get it—simply mail the coupon below.

Unusual Christmas Cards for You!

Your Card pictures a serene Christmas Eve scene. A warm glow of yellow light shines from the windows of the homes. Pull the sliding strip—one by one—the lights go out. For a moment, the scene is dark.

As the strip moves along, the church windows seem to come alive with bright yellow light. And then, your message and message are revealed, printed on the strip.

The Lighted Church Greeting

Telling the story of everybody's Christmas night, the lovely scene is pictured in azure set against a background of deep blue. Windows are cut out so the bright yellow shines from them. Generous 3 3/4" high by 9" long. Fine white envelopes. 25 Cards—$4.95; 50—$8.75; 75—$12.45; 100—$16.00; 200—$30.20. Postpaid. Money-back guarantee. Order: Lighted Church Greeting, No. 60-119.

Left—Your name is printed under the inspiring message in flowing engraver's script. Creamy 100-pound Strathmore paper with a rich texture and deckled edge.

The Praying Hands Greeting

The revered "Praying Hands" by Albrecht Durer, reproduced in sepia, is framed in a baroque border in rich gold and soft gray. Your friends will want to frame this unusual Christmas Card! Size closed is 5 3/4" x 7 1/4". Matching envelopes. 25 Cards—$4.95; 50—$8.75; 75—$12.45; 100—$16.00; 200—$30.20. Postpaid. Money-back guarantee. Order: Praying Hands Greeting, No. 82-119.

How To Be A Perfect Hostess When THE CHILDREN ARE COMING!

Expecting a "mob" of visitors—including children—for the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays? Then take a tip from Mrs. Joan Gardiner. She'll be a relaxed, care-free hostess because she has no worries about "accidents" happening to her furniture. Her sofa and chairs are protected by fitted covers made of amazing new Window-Clear Plastic. The children can romp about the living room, yet dirty shoes, sticky fingers, oily hair and spilled drinks can't harm the upholstery. These sturdy plastic covers are non-porous, so dust, dirt and liquids can't get through. And the plastic is super-clear, so every detail of upholstery color and pattern shows through. "Your perfect-fitting covers are the modern way to protect furniture," says Mrs. Gardiner. "And they're so inexpensive. For their furniture's sake—and their own peace of mind—every housewife should have your covers."

To protect your furniture—for the holidays and the year 'round—write today for FREE CATALOG. 150 easy-to-order styles and sizes for Lawson, Club, Modern, Hideabed . . . even Sectional & Bumper models. FREE Sample of clear plastic included. SCHILLER, 180 N. # Light for Living

A woman with blonde hair, wearing a red dress and a white apron, stands in a kitchen. She is holding a camera up to her eye, as if taking a picture. The kitchen has yellow cabinets and a red countertop. A large, bright light fixture hangs from the ceiling. The floor is made of red bricks. In the foreground, there is a wooden table with some items on it, including a black bag and a red shoe. The background shows a doorway leading to another room.

DECORATOR'S DIARY

An armchair journey through the home furnishings markets via the significant scribblings in a decorator's little black book

"If anyone ever needed an area rug, it's me!" said Mrs. Montgomery ungrammatically and, as it turned out, quite accurately. The problem was how to give a sense of division to her long, monotone beige living room without actually dividing it, for it's a room that must serve as a quiet library on occasions, as well as a gathering place and entertaining center. The bookish section of the room is a corner lined from floor to ceiling with book shelves, and Mrs. Montgomery's object was to have this L-shape angle enjoy the secluded quality and practical facilities of a reading room, without seeming to shut it off, for indeed it's a very essential part of the room when there are parties in it.

The whole expanse of floor is covered in a solid beige wall-to-wall carpeting, but we turned the partitioning trick neatly by filling in the book-lined corner with a 6'9"-square "area rug," which we created by seaming together three 27-inch widths of Magee's fretwork-pattern wool carpeting. This, with its congenially beige-on-beige nubby chain-link design on a smooth-cut pile background, makes a pleasant, not too sharp contrast with the rest of the living room floor, creating a sort of subtle room-within-a-room effect. Facing into the area are a pair of comfortable chairs which share a table and reading lamp. And at right angles to the other wall along the outside edge of the rug we've set Mrs. Montgomery's small table desk, which suggests a partition from the rest of the room, without looking unsociable.

The rug, which is broadloom Axminster in a grade called "Sky Top," comes also in nine-foot and twelve-foot widths, and in a variety of background colors. It's a natural for small areas like this that need the eye-amusing variety of pattern, but there's nothing in the book that says you couldn't cover an entire room with it.

At the Accessories and Design showroom, a little table with a look of Empire, the coloration of Biedermeier, and a directness that might be modern or ancient Greek, turned out to be Charles X. This, as every first-grade design student soon learns, represented France's inevitable light touch on the rather heavy-handed continental furniture of the 1830's. But, as Mrs. Henderson said delightedly, Who cares what it's called, so long as it's the perfect height (20½") to accommodate her low armless upholstered sewing or "lady's" chair by the living room fireplace, and its 15" diameter top is ample for a small lamp? Mrs. Montgomery, an indefatigable needlewoman, abides by General Electric's research on the right light for the job, which indicates that the source for sewing light should be about 12" above and 15" to the side of the work. So the little table works like a charm. But most important to the looks of the room, it is also an impressively handsome piece of furniture with a solidity rarely found in tables of its size. They tend to be skinny of leg and so give a room a cluttered, leggy look. The square marble base of our little table sits firmly on the charcoal-gray carpet, and its classic urn shape is gracefully silhouetted against the lemon-yellow chair. The wood is finished in the typical golden color of Italian or Austrian cherrywood, its moldings lacquered black. Its top is mottled gray-black marble, matching its base. We might have had it with a square top, which suggests that a lineup of such little tables would create a sensational coffee table, and we might also have had it lacquered in any color with almost any kind of marble.

Pliotron—T. M. The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio

Even if she's the best equipped housekeeper in town, she can't keep up with the fine dirt that enters her home every hour of every day. And this is the dirt that smudges walls and woodwork, grays curtains and drapes, gets ground into carpets—runs up cleaning and decorating bills.

Actually she's fighting a losing battle because most of this fine dirt comes sailing through conventional filters in the heating or air-conditioning system. Surest, easiest, most economical way to keep it out is by installing PLIOTRON—the world's first fully washable electrostatic air filter.

Just as a magnet captures particles of iron, PLIOTRON plastic fibers electrically capture up to five times as much fine dirt as ordinary filters, to give you cleaner, more healthful air at lower cost.

PLIOTRON costs more than "one-time" filters, but first cost is its only cost. When dirty (and you'll be amazed at the dirt it collects), it can be easily restored to like-new efficiency by a quick bath—can be used over and over. And this means additional savings on both filter costs and maintenance, since an estimated 90% of all heating and ventilating service calls can be traced to clogged filters.

Bringing an illusion of windowed spaciousness to the far wall of this room is an enlarged mounted photomural of a calm woodland scene.

A photomural for that blank wall

By MARGARET WEISS

Though most of us maintain some kind of picture album—usually a hit-or-miss affair of largely unmounted specimens of our camera technique—few amateur photographers realize what a wealth of wall decoration may lie within its sturdy covers as possible murals.

Have you ever envisioned what a superb photomural could be created from your snapshot of the luxuriant Everglades, the rock-bound coast of Rockport, the Cliff Palace at Mesa Verde? Or maybe that shot atop Montserrat, or the one you took at Chillon Castle on Lake Geneva? And how about that sepia print of the Colosseum or of the Roman amphitheatre at Arles?

Photomurals—huge enlargements, several feet high, wide and handsome—can be made from any average-sized, sharply detailed, fine-grain negative. A little too ambitious a project for a beginner, perhaps, but certainly easily within the scope of any experienced amateur armed with enlarging equipment and basic darkroom procedure. And, of course, if your experience or your darkroom space is limited, there's always a professional studio around where photomurals are made to order from negatives that you supply.

Enlargements may be hand-tinted, sepia or black-and-white, and if expense is no consideration, color negatives and transparencies may also be used. Your choice of dimensions is a generous one, ranging up to forty inches high and eight feet wide. After the big print has been mounted on tempered wall-board with wheat paste, it is ready for whatever type of framing treatment you elect to give it.

Since a photomural is intended to be lived with and looked at in much the same way as a painting, the material that you select should have true pictorial quality. Masses, tones and lines arranged in a coherent composition, pleasing proportions, proper contrast between light and shade—these are essential to any picture worthy of wall space, whether painting or photo.

Naturally, you'll immediately discard as poor mural material any shot that suffers from over-exposure with all details "burned out," under-exposure, double exposure, blurring because of camera movement, the subject being out of focus, hard shadows in a too bright noontime sun or a bad background with figures and action lost.

Some of the points professional jurors look for in picture-contest entries might be your guide:

Is the most important object off center to lend asymmetrical design to the composition?

Is there a simple contrasting background, either lighter or darker than the main subject?

Does the horizon line lie above or below the center to avoid cutting the picture in half?

Has proper lighting been used—at a 45-degree angle in the sunshine of mid-morning or mid-afternoon, unless special effects were sought in some moonlight or street-light scenes?

Are there adequate contrasts of size within the scene to create dramatic interest?

Does the photo have pictorial balance—a "balancing of masses?"

Does it reflect atmospheric quality, depth and "third dimension?"

And, as in all forms, do curved lines lend your picture grace, diagonals give it rhythm and action?

Are there vertical lines for dignity, horizontal ones for repose?

Let's assume that you have in hand the picture that you would like to transform into a decorative wall treatment. Your next decision is the all-important one: Where will your photomural be used?

Suppose your favorite photo is one of the majestic Bernini Colonnade in front of St. Peter's in Rome. A portion of this might be a dramatic choice for one wall of your foyer, lending an air of graciousness to a usually small area. So, too, would be a bit of Versailles—balcony, grillwork and all. Or perhaps a scene of Charles II's flamboyant Cypress Gardens—to be reflected in a facing mirror wall to simulate an arboreal allée.

Woodland scenes are equally compatible with foyer, stair and dining area. In one home recently visited, plans were under way to use panels of the four seasons of the year as they transfigured a tiny glen nestled within the blue foothills of the Berkshires.

For any room that has a fireplace, especially a music room, an extremely effective photomural can be created from a panoramic view of sky and clouds floating upward from the dado. A dressing room wall might be the spot for a botanical study, a montage of undergrowth motifs or perhaps a group of waterfowl in flight.

Beside a low chest in one corner of the living room—or perhaps a screen—you might try slender vertical panels of nature studies treated in the style of Japanese ink wash. (Please turn to page 180)

How to leave home and like it

By MARION GOUGH

One picture, we always say, is worth a thousand words. But because of a tragic flaw in our make-up which renders us totally incapable of taking a decent picture, we rarely travel with a camera. "How did you take this one," they ask us in astonishment, "through the bottom of a Coke bottle?"

We therefore roam abroad, free as the wind, unbuckled, unstrapped and unencumbered by light meters and filters and the sudden urgency to change film just as the sightseeing bus is ready to roll. Naturally, we are eyed with some suspicion by our traveling compatriots who appear to feel there is something un-American about leaving home-base without at least one Rolleiflex to check at the door of every museum.

We're ashamed of our shortcoming, of course. The bitterest pangs of remorse that ever strike us usually occur as we sit in the gloom of someone else's living room watching the (Please turn to page 162)

Culture begins at home

Culture is the way we live—the way we make that way of life beautiful

Culture is beauty, and thought, and study, and creativity—brought home. It's the best that's been said, thought and done—right in our own living room. It's what we wear and why we wear it, it's what we eat and why we eat it, it's what we surround ourselves with in our daily life.

Culture is what we do when we don't have to do anything

Culture is what we do with our leisure. It's what we do with a recipe when we don't have to do anything to it. It's what we do beyond any necessity for doing it except that it adds meaning and beauty to whatever we do.

Culture is now and here

Culture will not repeat in America its history in Greece or Rome. Emerson has said it, and the person of culture knows it. He sees it in our factory work and in our workshops, in our tableware and in our fabrics.

Culture is personal and individual—or it is nothing

Culture is not an affair of academies or authorities. It is each man expanding to his full growth, becoming all he is capable of. It's what he brings home by himself, to himself, everyday of his life.

Another chapter in our never-ending story of how culture begins at home opens on the next page with How to Live in Your Living Room.

HOW TO LIVE IN YOUR LIVING ROOM

By the HOUSE BEAUTIFUL STAFF

When man once conceived the universe as turning around the earth, he was only slightly wrong. It actually revolves around one's home. All time and all space wheel in a great curve around one's chair in the living room, that point where one is freest to explore the universe.

This is not to say that the universe is small, but rather that one's living room is incredibly, heavenly large. For doesn't the living room offer the best environment to cultivate one's interest and one's self?

Virtually every act we undertake, whether we must do it or we choose to do it, can be illumined with interest and fascination, if we know something about it. And, miraculously, our interest increases, progressively and arithmetically, the more we know.

It is no coincidence that the word culture has the same root as the word cultivate. To cultivate is to promote the growth of a thing. Culture is the result of improving and refining the mind (and consequently life) by education and knowledge. The best habitat for cultivating the mind is in your own living room, where you can proceed, at your own pace, to investigate whatever interests you in the whole world.

To pursue culture is nothing less than to order our life so as to savor life fully, to discover beauty where it might have gone unseen, to enlighten all our experiences by reflection and study until we have achieved understanding.

It is more than that. Culture means bringing within our own brief life span more than our own life's experience. It is imaginatively to live many lives—present and past.

It is this capacity to share other lives, to reflect with other men on the ways of their lives, that makes us most man-like and almost god-like. Within the limits of our own life, we can enjoy life unlimited—once we open the doors of perception and knowledge.

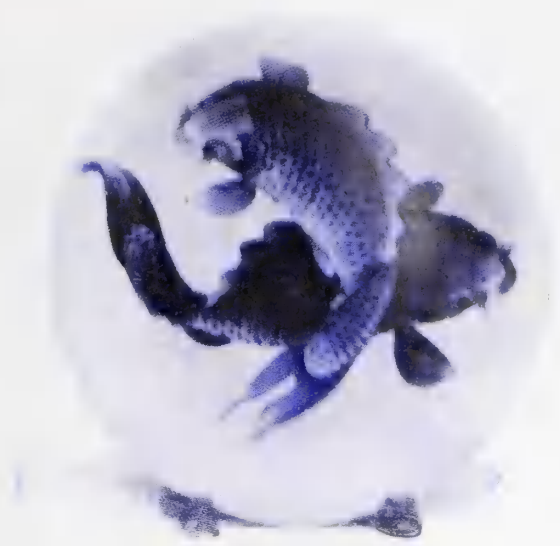

Where do we start? Right where we are.

The walk we take in the woods can be charged with awareness and interest in everything along the way. We can bring our walk home with us to the living room, where we can pursue it at ease in our arm chair in the nature writings of John Muir, John Burroughs and Joseph Wood Krutch, in the magical photographs of Ansel Adams and Edward Weston, in the esthetic contemplation of a twisted bough, in learning about the complex simplicity of a single wild flower. Thus we can walk where we have never been and see things we have never seen. And we can meet our great land as it was a century ago, through the eyes of the men who first discovered it.

Even the plates which hold the food we eat can be the springboard from which we take off to pursue a new interest. The purchase of one beautiful dish can produce a delight which leads to a thirst for knowledge about the history of such dishes, which in turn produces a desire for more such beautiful dishes.

It is the proper concern of the person of culture to want to surround himself with useful objects that are beautiful and beautiful objects which he subjects to useful purposes.

Where else than at home, in our dining room to be sure, can we live with such treasures as these blue and white porcelain dishes of the Orient in such intimacy that only then might we say we really possess them? And where better might we pursue and deepen our appreciation of them than in our living room surrounded by the best of books about them? Possession and appreciation are two sides of the same coin. We read about our porcelain in Sir Harry Garner's book with the close feeling of one looking at a family album. We know exactly the shade of blue he talks about, the forms, glazes and symbols of the Chinese, Korean and Japanese wares he refers to. It's only when we (Please turn the page)

frequently use the china of China for our meals, when we hold it against the light coming through the window, examine its stylized symbols and compositional perfection, that we begin to know something about it. And, oh, the pleasures of knowing, of becoming expert! How personal and alive such culture becomes! How alive life itself becomes when we use these potentials of our living room to extend our lives to distant times and other civilizations!

History belongs to the museum. Culture belongs to the home. When you have held and handled and read about the rare artifacts of man's early attempts to make useful objects beautiful, you gain a perspective about our own times. You become a better equipped critic to judge present-day efforts at beautifying useful objects. You cannot get such culture from a museum display case: objects that are untouchable and distant are but footnotes to personal culture, valuable but somewhat aside. Culture must be kept alive, and it must be caught on the wing. It is not a butterfly, pinned to the wall and terribly still. It is not academic knowledge, unrelated to life and living. Nothing human or natural is alien to culture. And it does not matter where you find it or what part of it you make your own.

Cooking and eating constitute an immense world of culture (and we describe them elsewhere in this issue). The intellectual pursuit of this never-to-be-ignored subject can best be done in the living room by reading the writings of such articulate gourmets as M. F. K. Fisher, Brillat Savarin, André Simon, by following the immense literature being published on nutritional research. We recommend to you the statement about all this on pages 96-99. A cultural attitude toward food is a perfect example of how the quality of our daily life may be enhanced and deepened whenever the mind is brought into full play.

Our interests need not be costly to be cultural. The objects we collect to spark our interests need not be collectors' items, rare and expensive. They may be shells or stones or butterflies collected with our own hands. They might be American ceramics, much of it as good as the best of the ancient Chinese, and even more challenging to collect.

Perhaps the examples we mention seem to you too closely identified with the "fine arts." If so, don't let them mislead you. One of the most meaningful collections we have seen is a grouping of old, scavenged locks, keys and escutcheons that make finer abstract compositions than far higher-priced abstractions on canvas by Jackson Pollock or de Kooning.

Imagine, for a moment, that you are making the proper study of man, which is man himself. That is to say, you have been reading some of the excellent anthropology books that are so numerous these days. You become intrigued with the variety of ways man has depicted himself through the ages and you start to pick up sculpted fragments of heads of different historical peoples. Here are images of man which man has conceived of himself, images which are as fascinating to study as a mirror held up to life.

Imagine these sculpted heads (Please turn to page 153)

Books, Children and Men
 by Paul Hazard
 (The Horn Book, Inc.)

The soul of a child is a singing thing and its song is a song of wonder. Tenderness can touch it sometimes, love can reach it often, but how can you fuse a child's soul with your own, any time and always?

Is it as simple as reading a book together? It is in our family. When we settle down to read to our six-year-old Maury and four-year-old Betsy, we not only share their snuggling softness, but we share their imagination and understanding and quick laughter; we share the impulsive meeting of eyes mutually appreciating a mystery or a high excitement or a quiet beauty. There is a magic in this, a magic that mingles souls.

It's also the kind of magic that converts an ordinary rug into a flying carpet—and the key of it is wonder.

After all, what do children truly want from books? More than anything else, they want what you want—a good story. Only they want it more simply told. When they're caught by a story, they want it to speed straight to the end with a minimum of gush, a maximum of sheer enjoyment. They want to know what happens next.

Marge and I have watched the faces of our children as we have read to them (usually just before bedtime) and we know that books are not only a pleasure; they're a need, a mental and spiritual food. Books offer so many things: sense and sensibility, the carefully planted seeds of knowledge, a strong feeling of security and the special kind of joy and release available only to the children of the world who are not yet faced with the reality of the world.

The best of the children's books are those that thread their stories with curiosity, teasing at the romance of strangeness.

This strangeness can be full of the fact of now or the fancy of fairies. But whether fact or fancy, there must be one thing more, there must be some kind of beauty. This does not mean prettiness or even poetry, but it does mean a kind of intangible mood, a mood that brings a special feeling about trees into a fact book of lumber, a mood that must dress up a fable with phrases that stir the sensitivity and capture it (have you ever heard a little girl gasp at the description of a fairy's dress?).

Real life, imagination, beauty—here is the essence of children's literature, but not the formula. There is no formula. But there is a prime rule: Don't mix the different worlds of real life and imagination, don't tack a moral onto a pleasant poem, don't mix the medicine with the honey. Any such combination causes a hodgepodge of puzzlement.

During any family reading, identification is natural and quick. Maury is Pinocchio or the Crow Boy or the little boy in The Biggest Bear or the Jack in the beanstalk or John in the Pogo books or Hansel; and Betsy is Gretel or Cinderella or Madeline or Mei Li or Nurse Nancy or Wendy in Peter Pan or little Red Riding Hood or the girl in A Little House of Your Own or Kiki who learns to ice skate (the identification was quick enough for Betsy to wonder aloud when she was going to get her skates).

As another girl put it, in answer to a survey on why she read books: "I can be anything the book describes—a nurse, a doctor, an artist and even a wife."

This is good. The complication comes only when a nurse and a Cinderella are jumbled together somehow in a single story, the identification and the imagination tearing at each other. Just as you must search carefully for the sugar content of the children's books you buy—the sticky words and syrupy plots that still fill so many of them—so must you watch for the bad mixture of fact and fancy.

Many parents feel that the child will reach for what he wants in books and grow in his own direction and that the parents should mainly supply the wanted books at the wanted time. But the parents' job is much more than mere feeding of books for existent interests. The parents' bigger job is the opening of new worlds, new directions, stretching instead of saturating.

At any family reading session, a favorite question always is, "And what does that mean, Daddy?" Unless you are absolutely sure of your answer (and you'd better be, because children check up), then we recommend the ready reply, "That's an interesting question. Let's look it up together." For this we urgently advise the purchase of a family encyclopedia. The three best: World, Compton's, and Britannica Junior. You can't go wrong on any of them. There are some differences: World uses simpler vocabulary, Britannica Junior believes in larger, easier-reading (Please turn to page 186)

Nature in our living room

The views of nature from our windows are friendly and full of detail. They have given us joy and spiritual release

By DOROTHY L. McFADDEN

We carefully placed our new home so that our windows looked off into the distance: down to the woods; off to the cultivated fields and occasional houses; then on to the folds of valleys and hills, hills and valleys intertwined farther and farther away; and finally to the vast sweep of ever-changing sky.

Friends drop in tired, hurried, certain that they have only a moment to say "hello." As they sink deep into the comfortable couch facing the view, in a moment or two we see them begin to relax. The strain vanishes from their faces, nervous hands are stilled, eyes become deep and quiet as they watch the flight of birds or the changing cloud shadows on distant hills. They stay. They talk of personal problems, of religion, discussing ideas we had thought would never interest them. Finally, they leave, reluctantly, visibly refreshed.

Such philosophising and intimate talk is usually unlocked only by campfire or hearth embers, not the modern living room. But we have this feeling of release in our house with "open" walls, through which the mind and soul reach out to trees and hills and sky. It has meant for me an almost physical sense of refreshment, deeply satisfying draughts of peace and serenity, a regaining of balance and perspective.

Since living with these great windows I feel, as the prophet Isaiah said, that suddenly "all is as new." I see the clouds, the vastness of the sky, the trees and hills as if I had never known them before. There is a comfort in the unchanging outline of the landscape pictured in each window, together with a fascination of discovery each time in new beauty, details formerly unseen. It is like a great musical theme with endless, harmonic variations.

The house, with its big windows, came at the time when I needed it most. I had gone through a period of nervous exhaustion which left me empty of all thought, with no urge to see anyone or do anything. My mind and spirit were blank. I had lost all interest in work, all desire to write or create anything. Planning this house was my only joy, my one small feeling of purpose, even though it seemed like a dream that would never come true. Yet since settling down here, our picture windows have given me over and over again what Anne Lindbergh calls "the time, the quiet, the peace, to let the pitcher fill up to the brim." Now, as the ancient Welsh minstrel said, "I know where to find a new song."

New interests come crowding into our days. My husband and I cannot keep up with them. We have tried to identify the birds that flew over our house on (Please turn to page 141.)

COOKING IS CULTURE, TOO

By POPPY CANNON and ELIZABETH GORDON

If one is to live so that every minute counts, to be alert and alive instead of numb, then cooking and eating rank high as cultural matters. For nothing affects the very quality of life itself so much as our diet, our pleasure in it and what it does for us nutritionally.

This calls for connoisseurship as opposed to mindlessness. The person who cooks and eats just to assuage his hunger is living no more fully than an animal. The person who is interested in food on the many levels on which it is possible to take an interest is actually living more. For the more you know about food the more you can appreciate it—sensually and intellectually. When you are aware of its many-faceted nature you can see things you would not have seen before. You literally step through barriers as concrete as the sound barrier was for the airplane, into new worlds of interest and awareness.

The cuisine you accomplish from day to day, from place to place, whether cooked by yourself or others, is as tangible a manifestation of the quality of your life as your architectural surroundings, the books you read, the costumes in your wardrobe, the music you listen to, or the objects you rest your eyes upon.

In some ways it is more important than all these other things, for there are so many times in a day, and therefore in a lifetime, when food must have your attention as a necessity. So what incomparable luck that it can also be a fascinating subject and a never-ending intellectual pleasure! (Once you become aware of how fascinating the world of food really is you bemoan the years you wasted, for there aren't enough meals to be eaten in a lifetime to let you try all you want to taste.)

There are many levels on which you can pursue food as culture, each so different from the others, that it is almost as though they were different subjects. There is the gourmet point of view, which is the one most people first think of in connection with connoisseurship in food. This is the training of one's tongue, one's eye and one's nose to recognize small differences. Without this ability to distinguish small, subtle characteristics, it is impossible to develop as a critic, as an expert or as a cook. Without it you cannot pass a valid judgment about quality, analyze the taste of a dish for its component ingredients, or cook creatively.

This sensitive awareness is the cornerstone on which a cultural attitude toward food must be built. Without it, one cannot see things purely—which is to really see them—without prejudice, preconception or snobbery. This purity of approach lets you be just as gourmet about a snack as a banquet. It lets you be as precise about the frying of an egg as the making of a French sauce. Once you have developed this critical ability to discriminate, it illumines your every action—whether it be choosing the best brand of canned tomato juice or deciding whether to serve those fresh pears raw or stewed, or how to use the leftovers.

Once you start paying attention to food in this critical way you open new areas of speculation. You make observations about how food expresses national and racial differences, how it reflects economic conditions. For instance, has it ever occurred to you that the reason France is such a cheese-producing country may be that they have so little refrigeration? Whereas we consume our milk as milk, thanks to our superb transportation system and universal refrigeration.

Thus the intellect comes into play, and you see food and cooking as an artifact, as living history. The folk wisdom and practices of any nation are embodied in their cooking traditions, and if you know how to analyze them you can learn much about their values: from the status of women in that society to the nutritional protection offered by the native diet.

The Germans have a proverb, "Was mann ist, mann isst,"—you are what you eat. Scientists have proved that many so-called racial and national characteristics—laziness, energy, persistence or instability often bear a direct relation to habits of eating. From whatever point of view, it would appear that the proper study of mankind is food. Whatever your interests, whatever your bent, all roads of inquiry seem to lead in one way or another back to food. Food is linked with every branch in the tree of cultural history.

Civilization as we know it, had its start when the hunters were joined or displaced by the food gatherers. It is not in the scrolls or hieroglyphics that man's earliest records are kept, but in the kitchen middens. The study of anthropology could be greatly enriched if more emphasis were placed upon the study of food and cooking habits.

How much more interesting—perhaps more fruitful—to think of the map of the world arranged not by races or national boundaries but by what cooking fat the people use. Pursue this idea and you arrive at a classification system like this: a Sour Cream civilization, the Butter areas as opposed to the Olive Oil areas, the Lard and Fatback sections, the Ghee (clarified butter) civilizations, the Nut Oil peoples (who use sesame, peanut, cottonseed, almond oils). By this system northern Italy would classify more properly with France, because north Italy cooks with butter rather than olive oil. Whereas some parts of France on the Mediterranean cook with olive oil, so would more properly classify with south Italy.

What is the value of such a point of view? It lets you think about food with more perspective. And it lets you be more creative when you cook. Such a philosophical frame of reference helps you to rationalize what fat flavors do for a dish, with which seasonings they marry well, what cooking temperatures associate with each, which fat blends best when wine or cognac is to be used.

When you have developed this kind of realization, you can transpose a recipe from one language to another—which is to cooking what changing the key or improvising is to music. In short, it enlarges your understanding and broadens your ability and scope as a cook, for it frees you from the mindless, blind following of a recipe. For nothing is so dull as doing something by rote, especially if you don't understand why you are doing it.

A knowledge of cooking adds a new dimension to travel. It is, in the truest sense of the word, your passport into new areas and your introduction to people, things and places, which the ordinary tourist never sees. The American traveler who goes round the world looking for a "good steak," "a decent plate of ham and eggs" and "a cup of real American coffee" might almost as well have stayed at home. All the sight-seeing he can cram into his itinerary will not make up for this sad loss.

No one would consider visiting Paris without tasting at least a few Parisian dishes. A trip through Les Halles, the Paris food market, early in the morning is included even in unimaginative tours. Yet how many have come away from Haiti without ever having tasted their Black Rice, dark as caviar with the inky juices of the tiny wild jonjon mushrooms dried under the tropic sun and lending an earthy mountain fragrance as delicate and almost as aromatic as the truffles of Perigord.

Through travel you should come to possess, to call your own, many parts of the world other than that in which you ordinarily live. But as Goethe has said, you can possess only what you understand. You can not understand any country or people unless you know something about their food. You have not really experienced Barbados just because you have swum on its beaches. You should also have tasted its flying fish and dolphin steaks and dove peas too. Dove here is pronounced to rhyme with rove and written sometimes as "daube" the French word for braise, as in Boeuf en Daube. When you taste pigeon peas prepared in this fashion, you will guess that this very, very British Island, now known as Little England, was once in the hands of the French.

When you travel you should taste your way around the world, though you may have to work at it. Except in a very few spots—notably in France, Italy and Scandinavia—all the public eating places conspire to keep the visitor away from the fine specialties of the land. All over the world, and especially in those places that go after tourism, the curse of "continental cuisine" lies heavy—very heavy—upon the restaurants, hotels (*Text continued on page 174. ## 16 Guideposts on the road that leads you to the Cultural World of Food

PHOTOGRAPHS BY TED KOEPPER

Have you within the last year tried to cook in a foreign way? Just one recipe isn't enough. For cooking cannot be culture unless you understand the background and the whys of it. For instance, the Chinese cuisine is probably the world's most sophisticated. Do you know enough about it to discourse for five minutes, to cook a Chinese meal, to do an American vegetable by a Chinese method? There are many aids to help you.

Are you trying to educate yourself in the realm of nutrition? This subject is very important, but it is so overlaid with misinformation from "popular experts" that you need to go direct to the first-line scientists and you need to freshen your knowledge each year. Here are some good books to begin on.

Within the last month have you broadened your experience in the miraculous realm of processed foods? Have you tried one new mix, one new frozen prepared food, one new canned food? Don't let habit or snobbery cut you off from this world.

Have you taken advantage of at least one "gift of the season" in your locality? Did you let the shad go by in the spring, or did you forget currants and gooseberries this summer? If you live in Florida, did you buy those fragrant Rock Melons? Being savvy about your own local "best" is part of food culture.

Have you added anything recently to your cooking technique? Have you mastered Hollandaise—either the old way or the new way in a blender? Or tried Virginia Stanton's way of thickening sauce with soda crackers? Or how to mince without cutting yourself?

Have you sipped something different: some new wine, a beer from another part of the world, or the new 'White Rock' vodka mixer. Or have you tried, in any long cool drink, that pink glorifier cranberry juice, known as "Cran"? Or why not try vermouth on the rocks, or some of the Italian aperitifs like Campari? And don't let the summer go by without trying a spiced iced-tea punch.

Have you brought into your present at least one gastro-nomic remembrance out of your past? Have you, for instance, known again those big hominy grits, which now can come out of a can? Or have you tasted once more a thick brown lentil soup, or wilted lettuce, or corn bread served blazing hot together with ice-cold, old-fashioned buttermilk? Or have you cooked greens or stringbeans southern style with "sidemeat"? In foods, as in other forms of culture, the past is part of a rich experience.

How many of these do you know well enough to properly describe them and know when to use them? Blue Lake canned green beans, new young early June peas with tiny onions, pascal celery, canned tomato aspic, glacé de viande, whipped butter, old-fashioned raggedy canned peaches, canned pineapple sticks, dried mushrooms, grenadine, soy sauce, Temple oranges, mangoes, mole sauce? None is rare; all can broaden your cuisine.

Do you regard seasonings as a big wonderful world to play around in creatively? Have you discovered where shallots fit in between the flavor of onions and garlic? Have you discovered soy sauce as a marinade for meats? Have you become acquainted with the many things you can do with saffron?

Have you discovered the taste thrills of smoking—either hot smoking or cold smoking? (It is not the same as smoke curing.) It is a basically different way of cooking meat, fowl and fish—as old as the walls of China—and bears no resemblance to baking, frying or broiling. There are a variety of smokers on the market. (This one is electric and especially designed for fisherman.) You haven't lived till you have tasted smoked steak.

Have you found a kindred spirit with whom you can talk or with whom you can experiment? (If you'll pardon an awful pun, but we can't resist it: Have you got a "pan pal"?) At least half the fun in a cultural approach to food is talking about it, weighing the pros and cons of a point, discussing how to improve a method or a taste, exploring the history of a foodstuff, or the geographical progress of a recipe across the face of the globe. Lucky is the cook who has such a person to cook for daily. But one can have many such friends who can be entertained, or traveled with, or shopped with.

Have you acquired any new utensil lately? It may be nothing more than a serrated knife which makes life so much easier in tomato season, or a parsley mincer, or a "Mouli" to julienne string beans. Or it might be larger like a thermostatically controlled griddle or the Gilbert Casserole. Or something big, strange and wonderful like an electronic oven? And if you aren't using a thermostatic fry pan you are literally in horse and buggy days.

Have you within recent weeks really tasted—thoughtfully, carefully, analytically, critically—an uncooked food? We mean tasted it so fully, in depth, that you could write a page of description about it to explain it to a friend who had never tasted it. Without such sensitive awareness no cultural appreciation of food is possible. You must be able to know what a plain taste is, as well as isn't, whether it is sweet or sour or sweet-sour, whether fibrous or pulpy or both—before you can analyze a complicated taste made up of several ingredients and say, "There's too much mustard, too much sugar," or "it has dried out from too-long cooking."

Have you, within the last six months, become acquainted with a new herb or a new seasoning? The world is so full of them you should not stand still, and they open up such understanding about other national cuisines. For instance, do you know the delicate celery-like lovage, or the cucumery borage which adds such exquisite flavor to drinks and salads? Have you met the lemony taste of soumac, which originates in the Balkans? And why not try Javanese galingal, or Chinese Pekin Powder which was the mother of the presently well-known mono-sodium glutamate?

Have you found one new place to buy something good to eat? For instance, have you browsed through a food mail order catalog? Some very fine gastronomic friends can be found this way. Or have you gone to one of the fine gourmet shops that exist in our bigger cities?

Have you wrung variations on some familiar theme by transposing one fat for another? For example, use olive oil some time instead of butter, or equal parts of olive oil and butter as they do in Tuscany, or make mayonnaise with corn oil, or try the effect of almond oil, sesame oil, peanut oil or soy bean oil in your salad dressing? Or flavor vegetables with ham drippings instead of butter? Or have a fling making clarified butter, called "ghee," the cooking fat of India and Pakistan, or the clarified chicken fat of Vienna which you can use like butter on bread or in cooking.

The Ideal Music for Your Living Room

Once upon a time it was called chamber music. Today it is better called living-room music, for that is exactly what it was composed for—to be played in the intimacy of one's own home

The most intimate, the most profound of all music has been known for centuries as chamber music, and it has afforded serious composers their most personal outlet. Its purity of balance and economy of thought have long created a spell of its own.

In chamber music we have Wordsworth's ideal of emotion recollected in tranquility. And it is more than coincidence that composers through the ages have reserved for this form their deepest utterances. It is the supreme distillation of their ideas, and the four string instruments are catalytic agents that purge their musical thoughts of all dross. Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms, Bartok—all of them saved their best thoughts for chamber music.

Chamber music? A better term for this day and age would be "living-room" music. For that is what it is—music designed to be played in the intimate surroundings of one's living room. And that, thanks to the phonograph, is exactly what takes place today in living rooms in Kansas City and Miami, Vienna and Calcutta, Tokyo and Melbourne. Haydn and Mozart would be pleased. Of all forms of music, without exception, chamber music lends itself ideally to the phonograph.

The reason is not far to seek. Most chamber music is the right length to fit the LP disc, and it also affords something unique in that phenomenon of post-World War II known as high fidelity. The aim of high fidelity is to approximate most closely the original source of sound. Now, to approximate most closely the original sound of an orchestral disc you will have to crowd the 102 players of the Philharmonic-Symphony into your living room. Obviously you can't, unless you are singularly blessed and have an apartment the size of Carnegie Hall. And that kind of apartment has not been seen since Commodore Vanderbilt was prowling the stock exchange.

But on a chamber music disc there need be no problem. You can, if you have a good record and good equipment upon which to play it, approximate the original source almost exactly. The sound is comfortable and it is real. Modern technology has, within the last three years or so, provided a breath-taking illusion of four string players actually at work. The sound is not mushy. Each instrument sings sweetly, clearly and separately, trembling in its high overtones; and playing together they twine in a trestle of sound at once delicate and full. The Budapest Quartet or the Quartetto Italiano could just as well be in your living room, making intimate musical conversation for you, bringing to your ears one of the supreme distillates of Western culture—chamber music.

Although chamber music embraces everything from three to nine players (and occasionally more), its chief glory is the string quartet—two violins, one viola, one cello, each sublimating itself to the greater glory of the whole. Chamber music has no virtuosity and nobody shows off. The instruments are partners and carry on amiable discussions, always with point and clarity. No distracting "programme" is present, no superfluity of color designed to cover up weaknesses in musical thought. Where opera singers may rant, where pianists and violinists may sport with arpeggios, where conductors prance, the string quartet goes its Grecian way, offering nothing but music. An opera like Tannhaeuser compared with a Mozart quartet is a barrage balloon filled with hot air against a permanently iridescent bubble.

The new sophistication of synthetics

There was a time when a material that smacked of the test tube was anathema to any decorator worth his salt. And rightly. Because it is never enough that a fabric or a floor or a wall covering be tough as stone, impervious to coffee stains, and easily wiped clean with a damp cloth. It must also be beautiful, visually appropriate, and adaptable enough to take its place gracefully with many different kinds of materials. And early synthetics, for the most part, were not. Remember the original hard shininess of rayon, the washed-out color and clamminess of young nylon, the kitchen glaze and glaring patterns of the first vinyls?

For this reason it is a measure of the maturity that synthetics have reached when you see them enthusiastically used by topflight decorators in rooms which are representative of the cream of current American decorating. For if there is one quality which characterizes today's best decoration, it is a growing sophistication of taste and judgment, an open-minded but selective combining of choice things from present and past, and from the whole world.

In these two rooms the synthetic fabrics stand on their own merit because they are fresh, well designed, adaptable, quite apart from their easy maintenance. They are showing the results of fruitful design experiment in their almost limitless colors, textures, patterns and weaves, frequently combined or blended with other materials. These are no esthetic misfits, for synthetics now belong, as certainly and appropriately as such old, natural standbys as silk, cotton, wool, and leather.

Decorator Harold W. Grieve saw the pretty potentials of U. S. Rubber's vinyl-coated, Breathable Naugahyde as well as its practicality for a little girl's room. He used it to cover chest, shutters and headboard, and for a draped bedskirt and spread. Accordion door is vinyl. "Butterfly" wallpaper is by Louis W. Bowen, Inc., New York.

In this living-dining-family room, designed by William Pahlmann, rug, curtains, and blinds are DuPont nylon, tablecloth is DuPont Orlon, sofa and armchair upholstery is rayon, cotton and Lurex, and dining chairs (left) have seats of U. S. Rubber's "Trilok," a puckered fabric, woven of nylon, rayon and polyethylene yarns. The significance of synthetics here is not that they are durable, which they decidedly are, but that they were chosen primarily for their new beauty which now makes them unquestionable companions for fine modern furniture, antiques and elegant bibelots.

Faded silk keys room's color. Leather, silk fabrics and unexpectedly elegant rattan furniture are modern, yet create a mellowness associated with the past.

The greatest of all art for the home, we believe, is to make the home itself—its space, its walls, its integrated furnishings and decorating—a work of art. Perhaps nowhere is this truer than in the living room. Here is a fine example of how this might be done. Antique Chinese silk scrolls, installed in walls of natural walnut paneling become part of the architecture, and not simply incidental show pieces. Graceful rattan furniture of the McGuire Co. has a close, warm relationship with this living-dining room designed by Eleanor Forbes of Gump's in San Francisco. It is difficult to imagine one without the other, so unified and harmonious are they. They are a single composition, each necessary to the other, which is the essence of all art.

Works of art in the living room

By FRANCES HEARD

The quality of this living room—and of the dining area within it—reflects the intimacy that one senses between the owners, Dr. and Mrs. James Ziegler, Jr., and their possessions. There is a living association here, not a museum or exhibition atmosphere.

The whole scheme depended upon their own personally collected oriental art and the antique furnishings garnered on annual trips abroad or more frequent visits to local shops in New York. Add to this their conviction that workably simple backgrounds showed their collection to best advantage and provided for comfortable, relaxed living, when all were integrated and made one.

Space was saved by building in bookcases. Folding cane-paneled shutters at the window allow for light control. Floors were stained a dark ebony and left bare except for fine modern rugs at the fireside and in the dining area, thus defining them as distinct areas. This handsome coordination of art, antiques and contemporary planning was by James Amster Associates, decorators.

Against a background of a six-panel, sixteenth-century Japanese screen, Venetian chairs by Lavezzo, covered in Thaibok silk, surround a marble-top, steel-base table by James Amster.

Chinese paintings of Ming period are hung against modern grass cloth from Murals, Inc. Silvery-beige monotone of Schumacher fabrics and rug by Edward Fields contrast with Chinese teakwood table. Desk above by Amster has etched steel base.

When the ladies come, get up on a pink cloud

By VIRGINIA STANTON

House Beautiful's Party Editor

Entertaining for "ladies only" can be so much fun—if you approach it properly. For this is the one type of party where I feel I can go overboard and really "gussie up" the table. I pull out all the stops and have a lot of nonsense going on—in the décor, china, flowers, dishes made of frozen ice and the like. Women love it, even though many men would be made vaguely uncomfortable by it.

The food you serve need not be complicated, but it should be something a little different. Your guests probably get enough of that chicken patty routine at their club meetings. I always try to have a menu that can mostly be prepared the day before and just tossed together at the last minute.

Actually this luncheon I am going to tell you about would be good for "the boss's wife" or your mother and her older friends. I find that gals my own age (what am I saying!) can be happy with cold meats and a salad, but the older women like a little more pomp and circumstance, ceremony and attention.

This luncheon is supposed to lift us up to a pink cloud, literally and figuratively, so we drink a pink champagne all the way through. (I use Cresta Blanca.) The first course is cold jellied bortsch with sour cream and chives (out of tins and perfect colorwise and tastewise). This is followed by individual casseroles of chicken with ham and peas, accompanied by sourdough French bread. Dessert is fresh strawberries. Simple but not simple-minded!

With the champagne, before we go to the table on the terrace, I serve just a little item to nibble on. A good one is "Peanut Puffs," packed by G. H. Beurhaus Co., San Francisco. I use either saucer type champagne glasses or small Pilsner beer glasses. I ice two bottles (for four) to carry us through the whole event on that pink cloud.

How a woman over seventy manages two acres

By JEAN LAWSON
Garden Editor

Nancy Cook's garden is the finest example of horticultural finesse we've ever seen. Perfect in every detail, it would do credit to the bygone age of estate gardens. Yet Miss Cook, who designed and cares for the garden herself, has never been a slave to her two acres of Connecticut countryside. Instead, in these years since her retirement, she does only those things which give her pleasure. The key to her gardening success is simplification. This garden is the result of a lifetime's observation and innovation in doing things the easy way.

So successfully had she worked out the details of managing her garden, that during recent months when she was ill, its care went on much as usual, as she did the easy jobs with some help from members of the household and a man who worked a few hours in late afternoons each week. When we saw it again last month after a three-year interval, it had almost the same fine finish as before. Only an occasional dead leaf or vine in need of pruning showed the lack of her attention.

Perfection like this is rare in gardens. Yet, Miss Cook does nothing which could not be done just as well in any small garden. Because her suggestions are so applicable to so many homeowners, we give you the most important ones below.

1. Keep things compact. Don't cultivate any more land than you need. When Nancy Cook laid out her new garden, compactness was her watchword. The two terrace gardens are only as large as necessary to allow a comfortable feeling of enclosure with vistas through the taller trees and shrubs. One lawn measures 1,000 square feet, the other 1,200. The first takes approximately 20 minutes to cut with a reel mower, the other 25 to 30 minutes. (Continued overleaf)

1 Front terrace. a cool oasis on hot days, extends out from the paving in a fault-free carpet of grass plentifully interspersed with white clover. Here, sheltered by an extension of the house roof, Nancy Cook and her friend Marian Dickerman enjoy a private world defined by a fence and given privacy and peace by a deep, luxuriant planting of trees, shrubs and perennials. There is no indication of the road which passes a few feet beyond the far fence. More important, there is no hint of effort; there are no frayed edges to indicate that the garden might get out of hand. Here everything is perfection, from the immaculate lawn, to the trim hedges and the complete absence of dead flower heads, seed pods or scraggly, pest-ridden foliage. The secret of this horticultural finesse is largely management, backed up by a fine assortment of efficient tools and power equipment. But the plants themselves also play an important part in the well-groomed look of the garden. For the most part mature, shapely shrubs from a previous garden, they were all rated on their nuisance value before moving. Messy, troublesome plants have no chance here.

2 Back terrace is warm, uncovered contrast to the above, pocketing the faltering sunshine of winter and early spring. Equally compact in layout, it has less lawn, measuring 1,000 square feet as compared to 1,200 in the front lawn. Both areas are so small Miss Cook has to compete with her friends for the satisfaction of mowing them. Hedges, too, are low and short enough to make clipping with an electric trimmer just enough of a job to give one a feeling of accomplishment, not work. Grass between paving stones in entrance to this terrace is one of the few luxuries in garden. But since she sees it daily from where she sits, either inside or out, Miss Cook feels it is worth the little extra time needed to trim it. Pot plants, which she sometimes groups on the terrace, are also in this category. Each terrace is enclosed with a sturdy fence and gates because she feels it is easier to fence out the rabbits than try to do away with them. Fences also help block view of natural meadow beyond, enhancing perfection of garden within.

3 Work center of garden is breezeway between house and garden tool house. Here, in area sheltered from wind and rain by roof and angle of building, are all the small tools and chemicals which Miss Cook uses frequently. Spread out along walls and shallow shelves, they can be located in an instant, a fact which encourages their frequent use.

Breezeway shelves and brackets keep in readiness flower pots and trays, spray nozzles and siphon applicators including one just for weed killers, extra electric cords, a stack of stainless steel pails, measuring cups and spoons. Shelf on left also provides lightly shaded spot for starting plants from seed. Faucet at right is one of many installed to provide water at exactly the places where it is needed. Ramp facilitates moving of wheeled equipment such as lawn mowers, power sprayer and lawn cart into tool house.

Garden chemicals in small amounts are stored in tightly capped glass jars above bench where mixtures are prepared and loaded into pest equipment.

Vegetable and cutting garden is small, with only a few plants which give big yield for effort and space needed. Area is treated with Crag herbicide in early spring to destroy weed seeds as they germinate. Buckwheat hull mulch around plants discourages weeds, conserves moisture. Note overhead irrigation.

Perennial bed, a long, irrigated strip planted with iris, tulips, daffodils, lilies and daylilies, receives almost no attention, yet provides loads of flowers.

Vegetable and cutting garden

Perennial bed

How a woman over seventy manages two acres continued

Vegetable and cutting garden is limited to tomatoes, lettuce, asparagus, chives, mint and parsley, a dozen or so marigolds, asters, heliopsis and small flowered zinnias and a row of floribunda roses. Other cut flowers come from a narrow bed of spring bulbs, peonies, daylilies, and lilies. Two apples and a pear tree supply enough fruit to keep her pleasantly satisfied.

These three cultivated areas, a small part of the two acres, are enclosed in tight fences as much for a feeling of intimacy as to keep animals out. Beyond the fences, natural meadows extend to property boundaries.

2. Avoid nuisance plants. Miss Cook suggests that gardeners determine in the fall the nuisance value of a plant and, if high, eliminate the plant from the next year's garden. She keeps in mind how each plant appears when young and when full grown and how it looks after blooming. This is particularly applicable to annuals and perennials, which she grows mainly for cut flowers. Spring bulbs she relegates to the cutting garden, feeling they are too messy and troublesome (Please turn to page 156)

4 Wild area. the largest part of Cook property, extends in natural meadow from fenced-in terraces to boundary lines. Because it is unseen from house, meadow is left to care for itself. Path to shady nook under tree is kept low by early spring application of the growth retardant, maleic hydrazide. One trimming and a follow-up application in summer keep path "mowed" year around.

Crushed rock is used as a neat, carefree paving on all areas in garden which get hard use: driveway and parking space, work area, the many paths which lead from one part of garden to another. In addition to being as painless as any paving to care for, rock makes a fine textural and color contrast to choice shrubs in plantings. When Miss Cook moved to her new home she brought with her only those shrubs from the old garden which had proved they could remain ornamental the year around with a minimum of attention. Among those which contribute to garden interest are the pyracantha on wall below, hollies, enkianthus, Thunberg spiraea, several viburnums, azaleas, taxus and lilacs.

Harold Grieve's imaginative decorating has given Bing Crosby's week-end house in the desert a comfortable urbanity rarely found in a vacation place. Carefree materials like natural wood, caning, bamboo and iron are treated with stylish lightness. Curtains are screen-printed with spires of flowering yucca (left), but instead of covering the whole fabric in an obvious way, the motif is used only once at each side, giving a decidedly artistic effect.

Decorating ideas from Bing Crosby's house

Bar in this living-dining-game room looks as stylish as the furniture. It is actually a refrigerator snugly framed in a boxing of beautifully finished wood. Working surface and drop-leaves are plastic-lipped to match the wood. Game table with built-in pull-out ash trays has a tough surface of chipwood.

Radio, television and paraphernalia for record playing are all built into one wall behind sliding panels of woven caning and satiny birch. These are all fairly rugged, typical vacation-house materials, but their colors, grains and textures are so skillfully combined here that the closed wall (right) becomes a beautiful pattern in the room. Arm-chairs swivel for TV viewing.

7 secrets of furnishing a tract house

By MARION GOUGH

1. Strive for non-conventional ways of doing things. The obvious is fatal in a mass-produced, hence oft-repeated, floor plan.
2. Use one color in all rooms that can be seen together. Get variety in rooms like bedrooms which can't be seen from the rest of the house.
3. Avoid overscaled pieces of furniture. Get bold, smashing effects with color instead.
4. Avoid big patterns in fabrics and wallpapers.
5. Try for one-of-a-kind accessories and fine art.
6. Outside, create distinction by landscaping and architectural additions, like terraces, fences, trellises, paved paths, and parking space.
7. Vary the exterior paint or finish color from those of your neighbors.

The house on these six pages is a tract house—an excellent tract house, to be sure, in a development in South Bend, Indiana. There is many a sound argument for buying such a house. But because it is ready-built according to a mass-production plan, how do you overcome the hazard of uniformity? How can you confer individuality on a development house to keep it from looking like the other houses around it?

This particular house owes much of its distinction to the furnishing principles we list at the left. To avoid the usual and obvious "decorated" look and to increase the feeling of spaciousness, the fabrics in its most conspicuous, frequently seen rooms—living room, dining area, activities room—are all in values of one color. Blue was chosen here because it is a happy complement to the warm mahogany plywood paneling. This single color immediately establishes a distinctive, homogeneous character and is repeated in large or small quantities in every room in the house. Yet the effect is never monotonous. The scheme is kept lively with changes in shadings from sapphire to Bristol and with a variety of textures.

Wherever pattern is used in these moderately sized rooms, it is moderately scaled, never over-assertive. Strong color contrasts are limited to bedrooms and guest-room-study. (Turn the page)

A monotone color scheme immediately establishes the individuality of this tract-house living room and dining area, which are seen as one room. To decorate in one color is not easy, because you must have subtle changes in textures, patterns and shades in order to avoid monotony. But the serene result is well worth the effort.

Avoid clichés of furniture placement and ornament. In the activities room, or family playroom, a long, low chest is used as lamp table for chair-and-ottoman reading. Another ottoman is kept at fireside. Obvious treatment here would have been to flank hearth with chairs, separated by a coffee table. See the fresh look given the mantel by a marvelously shaped rooster weathervane and apothecary jars, set off-center. Window wall, instead of being kept wastefully empty, is a background for furniture. Below, game table is also used for dining.

Notice that pattern, as in printed drapery of master bedroom (above and right), is moderately scaled and just pleasantly obtrusive. A vigorous, oversize print would have crowded room and disturbed restful flow of color. Desk is placed ingeniously at right angles to a window instead of flat against it, thereby serving as a side table for chair and ottoman. Besides its engagingly different look, the group furnishes a reading and writing area in small space. A pair of Dufy prints are framed in scale to "build up" the bed wall with color.

Blue runs through the house like a signature, but in the guest room-study it is accented by gold and the brilliant reds in the mosaic-patterned curtains and Chabor prints. Such strong contrasts would tire the eye in a more frequently used room. The sofa back is a brass-spindled headboard.

The exterior of a tract house can be saved from looking like its neighbors by a distinguishing paint color or finish. But the most dramatic transformations are worked by landscaping and minor structural additions. Trees and shrubs can change the apparent face of a house. So can fences and well-placed trellises. Here, roof overhangs of living room (above) and master bedroom (right) were extended. An added little lath house created the stylish louvered wall.

A tract house does not usually excel in its architectural detail. So you must strive for perfection of detail in its furnishings. Girl's room is a document of effective practices. See beautiful tailoring of bedspreads and unexpected box-cushion bolsters. Musical instrument prints, provocative in themselves, are set in frames of marquetry. Even sheets and blankets are charmingly different.

An unconventional choice of furniture, which is a variety of sympathetic styles and woods rather than one uniform style, contributes a pleasant new look which you feel you have never seen before. This fresh effect is further achieved by unhackneyed furniture placement. You see a long two-tier table extending like a room divider beyond a turn in a wall, a long chest or a desk placed next to a chair and ottoman as a lamp table, a sofa-bed placed parallel to a headboard instead of at right angles.

All the furniture is in the same medium scale, kept in proportion to the scale of the rooms themselves, so space never seems crowded. Low, horizontal furniture lines emphasize the height of the ceilings and the general feeling of airiness.

Wherever bold, impressive devices were needed to build up a wall or to create eye interest, as over sofas, beds, wall chests or fireplaces, the effects were achieved by strong color or provocative subject matter in good, carefully selected art. Paintings, prints, sculpture, handcrafted objects, and incidental accessories, down to the last ash tray, put the ultimate stamp of individuality on the house because they themselves are distinctive, in many cases one-of-a-kind pieces that one can see nowhere else.

T-shape plan provides for realistic separation of living areas. Central kitchen serves living and activities rooms. Plan and structure of this tract house will be discussed in a later issue.

Capitalize on the decorative value of your hobbies and interests, and you put a personal, individualizing stamp on a tract house—or any house. A corner of a musical daughter's bedroom looks like a little music room, furnished with a music stand and a small table.

For practical purposes this corner of the guest-study is a capsule office, created by a compact arrangement of desk, chest, and lamp pole. It is also a little fine art gallery.

What you need to know before you paint your house

By DR. JOSEPH E. HOWLAND

Words often used incorrectly

Even painters and paint stores often use a single blanket term to describe several completely different types of paint. Failure to recognize this fact may lead a homeowner into serious painting trouble. For example:

TERM	CORRECT MEANING	BUT OFTEN USED
Rubber-base	Any type of paint containing rubber or a rubber-like resin.	For a PVA, Latex or Acrylic paint.
Latex	A water-mix emulsion of Styrene-Butadiene particles suspended in water.	Any paint containing rubber.

TERM	CORRECT MEANING	BUT OFTEN USED
Emulsified Plastic Synthetic Resin	Alternate terms, equally correct for describing a PVA, Latex or Acrylic paint.
Vinyl	A specialty coating made from vinyl chloride in solvents.	For Vinyl-latex, a water-mix rubber-base.
Masonry Paint	Any type of paint made for use on masonry: may be oil, rubber-base, cement paint, specialty coating or a silicone water repellent.

Follow manufacturer's directions to the letter.

Thirty years ago it was easy. Houses were painted with "House Paint," usually mixed by trial-and-error on the job by the painter. He mixed a color to suit you and thinned the mix from an ever-present jug of "turps" until the paint brushed easily enough to suit him. But his whites weren't really white, and the colors were faded pastels—never bright and permanent.

Today we demand whites that sparkle, washing themselves clean with every rain, and bright colors only little more affected by the sun and the rain than the colors of the strutting peacock. Instead of one exterior paint, the chart below lists 24 types of opaque paints and 12 types of natural finish. Each is best for some one job.

Your problem of choosing the right paint for each job is harder, but the right paint is so right that the old-time painter still can't believe what he sees in the way of brightness of color and long life for the paint film.

Fail to steer your way safely through the potpourri of paints and you are likely to get only 35¢ or 40¢ for your painting dollar, becoming all too familiar with the business of burning and scraping off a paint failure because these new paints have such precise requirements. Know your way and you can keep a house new-looking—or make it weather gracefully—as you choose.

You start by answering these five questions:

1. Do you want to hide the surface—or have the grain and texture show? Opaque paint hides; natural finish leaves the surface exposed to view but protected.

2. Must the house look always-new—or do you welcome the rich patina that comes with weathering? Opaque paint is to prevent weathering; natural finish permits natural aging (most successful with redwood, cedar, cypress, brick and concrete—materials already highly weather-resistant).

3. Do you prefer gloss or flat finish? You can have either, but the choice alters how soon you must repaint. Gloss opaque paint must be reapplied every 5 to 6 years; flat opaque paint every 4 years. Gloss natural finish survives only 9 to 18 months; flat natural 4 to 8 years.

4. Is the surface rough and porous or smooth and slick? Smooth surfaces can have opaque or natural finish; rough ones look best with flat opaque paint or a penetrating kind of natural finish.

5. Do you have any local paint problem such as mildew, frequent dust storms or sulphur fumes from industries—or are you introducing problems by insisting on certain color combinations? Special formulas solve local problems (see chart): color problems are often by-passed, if you forego using self-cleaning paint on walls directly over colors or natural finishes.

Now refer to the chart below on What to Use Where. Here you can learn the key words to look for on the label to be sure that you get the right product to meet the five choices you have just made.

Moisture—No.1 enemy of paint

Rain on the outside of a film of house paint does it no harm, unless the paint remains wet for days. Then it may soften and hump up into fat, round blisters 1 to 2 inches across. This type of blistering is not common, and it differs from the usual blistering in that the “bubbles” are so big—always lined inside with a shiny amber coating, as if varnished. This “varnish” forms because too little oxygen gets down to the old buried paint.

Rain—or any water—that gets behind a paint film can destroy its bond to the wood or masonry it covers. Exceptions are the exterior PVA, Latex and acrylic paints, also the silicone water repellents: They form films that permit water vapor (but not liquid water) to pass through them. Note, however, that the silicone water repellents are recommended for stucco and masonry only, not for wood exposed to the weather.

Unseen moisture vapor is your main problem. The major source of paint-destroying moisture often escapes notice. It is the steam from cooking, bathing and laundering. This moisture filters into the structure as invisible vapor. When it hits the colder parts of the wall, the vapor condenses into water, which is fatal for the usual paint film. Once the bond holding the paint to the wall is weakened by the water, the pressure of the accumulating moisture pops the paint into squashy blisters. Punch a hole in a blister and water pours out. Let the blister alone and its water gradually goes back into the wood or masonry or penetrates the paint film when drier weather arrives, but the blister remains. By midsummer the now waterless blister cracks and the paint peels off. The blisters usually have no definite shape, but look more like a skin that has been stretched to the bursting point.

Ten gallons a day: This is the load of paint-blistering water vapor that slips unseen into the walls unless you use exhaust fans, venting tubes and vapor barriers. Leaks that let in rain water are more spectacular but no more deadly.

Painted too often? Too-thick paint film blisters readily. Big, round blisters, though, are not common, indicate that moisture has precipitated destructive chemical reaction between Deep-Tone green used over too-new Self-Cleaning white.

Blisters are usually the first sign dramatic enough to be seen by the homeowner—but because, at this time, there is no moisture to be seen, he seldom thinks that moisture was the cause of the problem. Nor does he recognize that the failure occurred last winter, even though he may notice it for the first time in the spring.

Fresh paint is also the victim of moisture coming out through the wall. This is a typical sequence where there is such a problem: You repaint in the summer or early fall and blisters show up next year by late spring, peeling starting in July or August. This quick failure is why the homeowner so often jumps to the wrong conclusion, blaming peeling on "poor paint."

Paint that has weathered a year seems to be porous enough for the moisture to escape without ruining the film. This explains why the old paint didn't blister.

but the new paint did (with each successive repainting, the paint film also may be building up in over-all thickness—and the thicker the film, the more it does swell when wet). Or, perhaps the earlier painting didn't have to stand up to quite as much moisture. You may have added several moisture-making appliances—a dishwasher, a washing machine or dryer since the previous house-painting—and you may not have bothered to vent them.

Blistering—and so peeling—is most common where winters are cold enough to condense moisture vapor rapidly. A rough test of this can be made by observing the windows in the winter. If they frost-up, you can expect moisture troubles unless your house enjoys proper vapor-barrier protection or you take steps to prevent trouble. (Note: If your windows are double-glazed, this test is not so reliable.) See "How to keep walls dry," page 165.

TWO PICTURES BY EZRA STOLLER

Wood sucking moisture from soil? Lumber in direct contact with the soil, or wet repeatedly by splashing mud, won't hold its paint. Problem aggravated here because boards are used vertically, making big wicks that pull water up the wall.

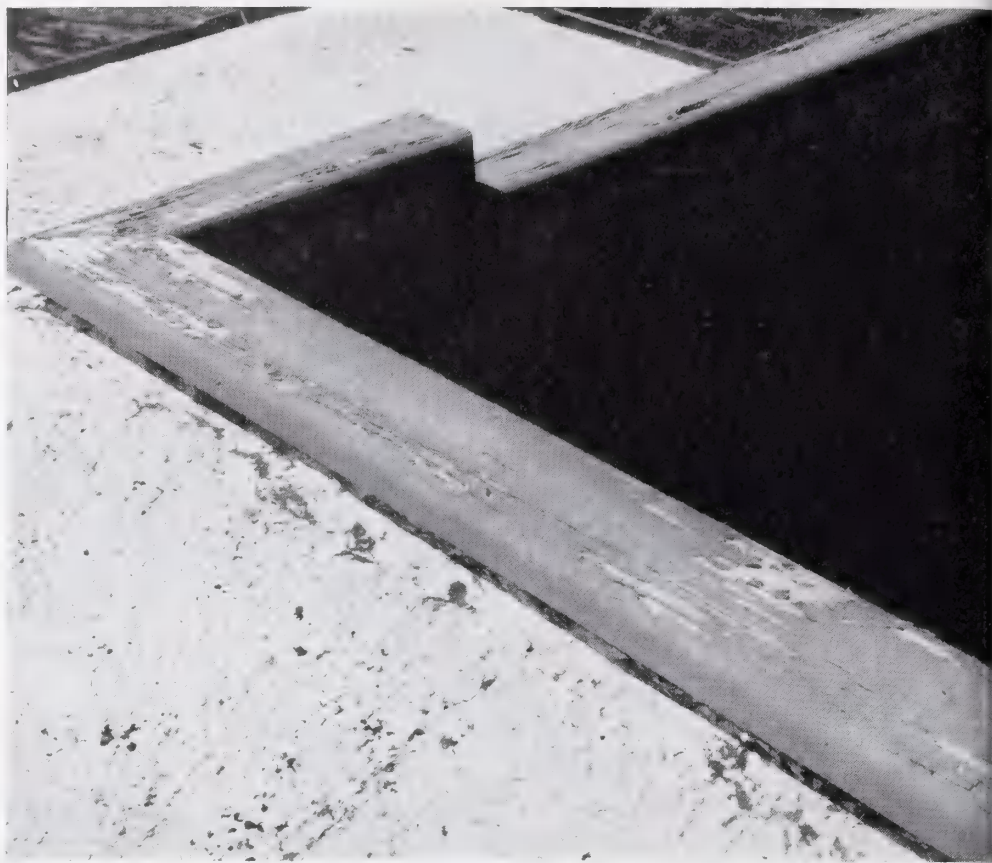

WILLIAM HOWLAND

Expecting the impossible? Non-waterproof type of plywood was exposed to the weather. Once moisture got into the wood, either as water vapor from indoors or as rain water via tiny cracks, the plywood was doomed to delaminate and buckle.

Exposure too severe: This wooden cap on a parapet wall shouldn't be painted with the usual types of house paint. Ice and snow piling up from roof at left keep the paint wet for weeks. Only one of the specialty coatings—epoxy, neoprene, polyester or vinyl (not vinyl-latex) can withstand such severe wetting.

Good painting adds years of life

The best paint can be spoiled by a poor painter, and often is spoiled by his not noticing little details at the time of painting. Fortunately the rules of good painting are simple, clear and easy to follow.

You decide first whether or not a primer is needed or, to ask the question a slightly different way, whether the surface should get one or two coats of paint. Deciding is easy for new wood: always use a primer. Apply only one primer coat. Use the primer made to go under the finish coat you plan to use.

The primer has a specific job to do: On wood or masonry it satisfies the thirst that could otherwise suck the liquid "binders" from the finish coat. Paint that loses its binding liquids has a short life, because its pigments are stranded without anything to stick them to the surface.

Skip prime coat when repainting—but not always!

Paint experts disagree. Most believe that the only time a prime coat is needed is when the old paint is in bad condition. Then the oil-satisfying powers of a primer are needed to seal off the bare surfaces. About the only rule that we can give you is that houses painted when they first need painting (no sooner, no later) stay freshest-looking and most trouble-free, if given just one coat of the right house paint at each repainting.

Stick to same type of paint used last. Many people when they see blistering or peeling, assume that they used the wrong kind of paint the last time they painted. This may be the cause of trouble, but before they switch to another type of paint, they should check other possible causes. They shouldn't damn oil, alkyd, latex or whatever, because of moisture-caused blistering or a short life due to an inferior grade of the type of paint in question.

Switching types, when you do feel this is wise, should be delayed until the old paint film has weathered. Paint films, still physically fit, can do chemical battle with the newcomer. Or they may shrink and swell at a very different rate and cause blistering, or may be so slick they defy a toehold.

Switching brands is a different matter: With the exception of the PVA latex-base and the new alkyd oil-base paints, you are usually safe in buying the brand-name of your choice. Many paint experts prefer to use the same brand of PVA or alkyd to avoid the "indigestion" that sometimes occurs when one brand goes over another.

Six rules for applying opaque house paints to wood

1. Banish moisture troubles before you paint—leaks that let in rain water or conditions that allow moisture from indoors to pass through the walls and collect behind the paint film. Opaque paint won't stay on surfaces that remain moist. Turn back to pages 124-125 for specific details on how to cure moisture troubles and send for free booklets mentioned in the "box" at the far right, if moisture problems are baffling you.

2. Give the paint something to "bite" into: Paint can't stick to dirty, greasy or slick surfaces. Scrub off all loose paint, also any dirt stuck to the surface. A wire brush does this best.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RUDOLPH LEPPERT, JR.

Overflowing gutters: This is a common trouble. Leaves or ice block the gutter and the water overflows, keeping the wood wet for days. Or gutter, or roof holding it, may have sagged (most likely to occur at big, unsupported corners).

Lack of storm door: Single doors are hot on the inside, cold outside, and seldom include a vapor barrier, so moisture from air indoors moves swiftly through them, may condense under paint film, push it off in blisters that shred when dry.

Greasy dirt calls for scrubbing with detergent and water. Use a laundry detergent like All or Tide. This same solution is useful when scrubbing away some of the paint film under the eaves or where otherwise protected from the usual washing action of rains (few people do this, unfortunately: most merely repaint, then wonder why the paint in these areas eventually chips or peels off).

3. Spread the paint so that it covers the square footage planned for it. Follow the directions on the label. Don't tamper with the mix (no thinner, no extra oil!). If more thinner or more oil could be added to the mix without cutting the life of the paint film, the paint manufacturer would have been happy to do it or to advise it in the directions on the label to cut the cost of the paint.

Many old-time painters object to using the paint as it comes from the can. They prefer to thin the paint until it flows easily. They object most strenuously to the new alkyd types of house paint, finding them naturally more "tacky" to the brush, because of their varnish-like toughness—you may have to insist that they do not dilute the paint automatically with their turpentine supply. Just recall that a reputable paint manufacturer tests each new formula for years in exposure tests in various parts of the country before he offers it for sale. Why let the painter attempt to doctor it by trial-and-error mixing by look, feel or smell?

Brushing or roller applicator is safer than spraying, especially if the old paint is in bad condition.

Beware of applying too little (Please turn to page 171)

A new servant awaits you, Madame!

By LAURA TANNER

The embroidery attachments for sewing machines are wonders of ingenuity. You can embroider at the same time you do your basic functional work

Automatic sewing has reached such heights of development that now the amateur can accomplish with ease all types of stitching from simple straight seaming to professional-looking hand trimming. Nor do you have to be a mechanical genius, for intricate engineering has solved the know-how for you. Limitless decorative designs are yours if you can push a lever or a button, read a simple chart, or drop a disc into a slot. Every woman who likes to sew has a wealth of creative possibilities within her grasp. And all with a speed unheard of with human hand.

The ingenious "hidden hands" within your sewing machine (there are several that accomplish the same end results through different methods) not only do tedious sewing on of buttons, make precise buttonholes, darn and mend, but send forth a flow of hundreds of embroidery stitches of seeming convent-taught perfection. By combining stitches you can build up design richness. By stitching with two-thread colors decorative possibilities increase. Such familiar stitches as the satin stitch, the zigzag, overcasting, and the scallop, which take long practice to perfect by hand, are but a few of the many stitches that can be turned out. They may be thickened, thinned, elongated, tapered, all with unfailing precision by controls which you operate yourself, thus investing a mechanical device with a personal quality.

These discs and dial are your magic guide for effortless embroidery

The White comes with 5 double discs with a fancy stitch on each side. Easy-to-work controls widen or lengthen stitches or let you switch design without removing disc, to produce rich diversity of decorative stitches.

On the Singer, 5 automatic stitches are already built-in. They are controlled with levers which can combine with 24 extra discs to give unlimited scope to design creativeness.

The Elna and Necchi depend on single or double discs. Drop disc into proper slot and thrill to flow of incredible stitches.

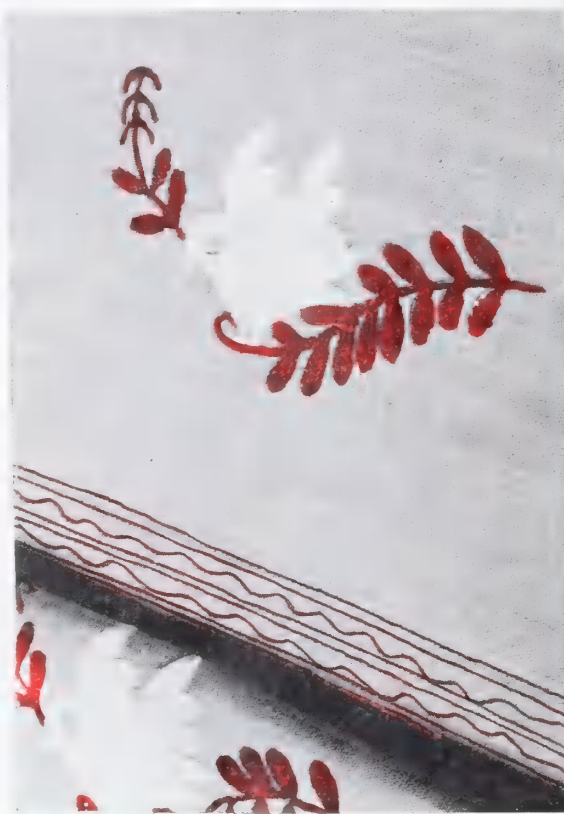

The Pfaff builds its designs into the machine, gives you a dial guide to 40 stitches. Set key numbers designated on dial, and embroider away to your heart's content.

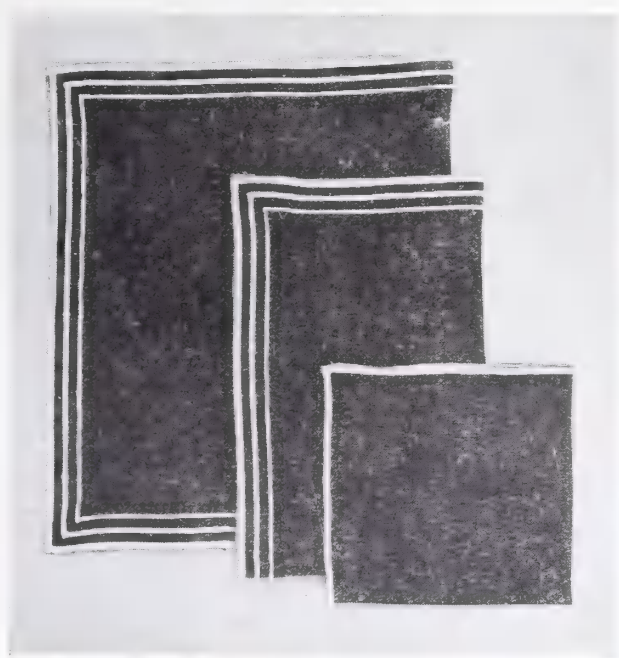

Use dressmaking details to trim drop of table cloth. Gay border could also deck a dressing table skirt or a bedspread flounce.

The same stitch you would use for darning makes the fine feather-like mat filler for the bird below. Band of stitches hems while it decorates.

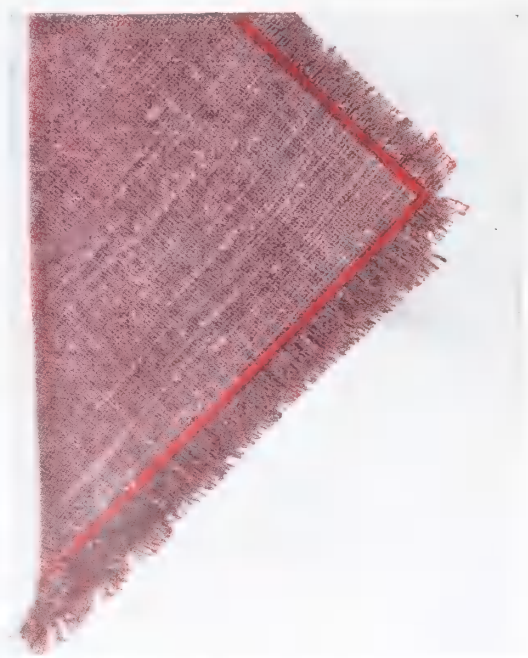

You can edge a napkin with a satin stitch without folding and hemming. Monograms are as easy as writing your name. You can embroider on leather, appliqué on sheer materials for shadow effects, thread your needle with fine metallics for extra sparkle. These machines are a boon to the woman who makes her clothes, as well as a source of inspiration for personalized home furnishings.

Buy the machine of your choice, take time to learn its possibilities and its limitations. Understand it and it will be a good servant to you. It works quietly and speedily to follow your instructions with uncanny precision. On these pages and the next two, we show you a few of the many ways this new servant works for you to enhance your home-furnishing possessions.

Charcoal linen mats and napkins are trimmed in rows of graduated satin stitch. Closeness of stitch binds fabric, omits hem. Worked on a Singer.

Napkin of Vicray Belgian linen is mechanically decorated with satin stitch worked close to fringe to give it body and prevent raveling.

A new servant awaits you, Madame!

Seven different stitches and a scallop on the hem edge decorate this percale pillow case and sheet (Dan River). With an automatic machine, this is the easiest kind of ornamentation, offers great variety. Worked on a Necchi.

Precise scalloping worked in two colors, with a satin stitch with arrowhead terminals, plus a shaped variation of the satin stitch, combine to give the felt table cover (left) a colorful decoration. Embroidered on a Pfaff.

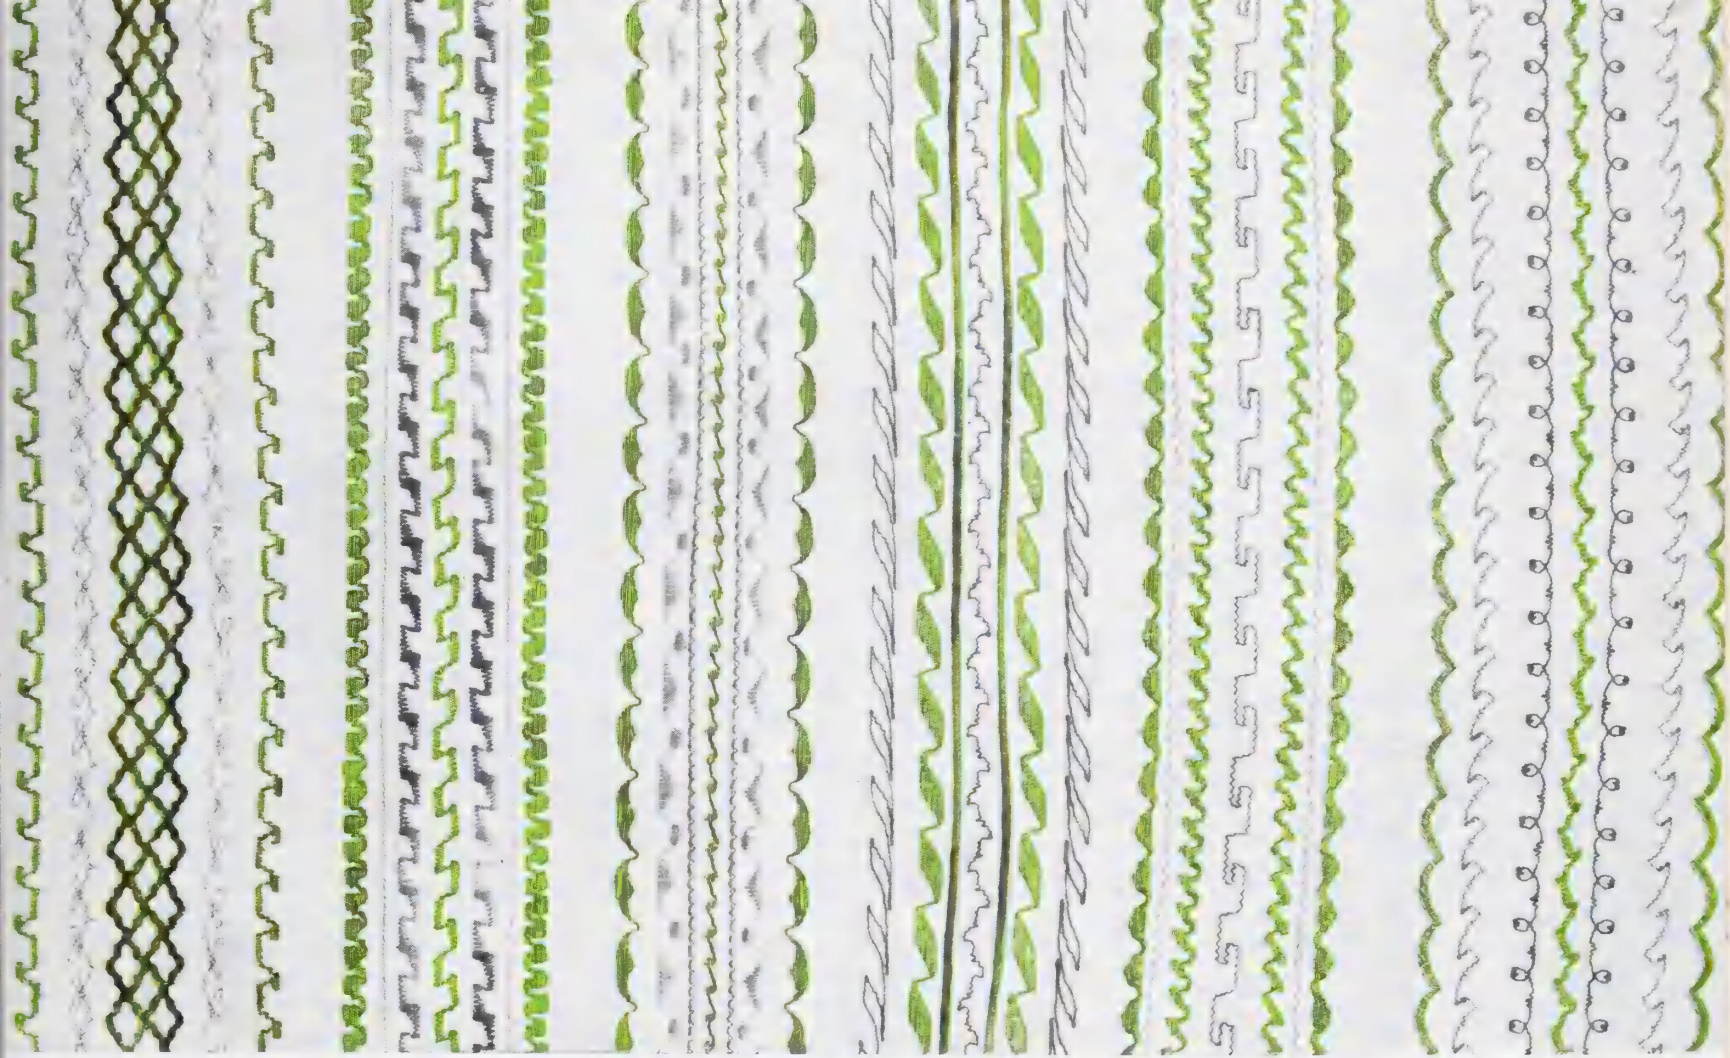

Start with stock organdy curtains (these are Berkshire's), and scatter appliquéd organdy petals over them connected with airy vine stitch. Worked on an Elna portable.

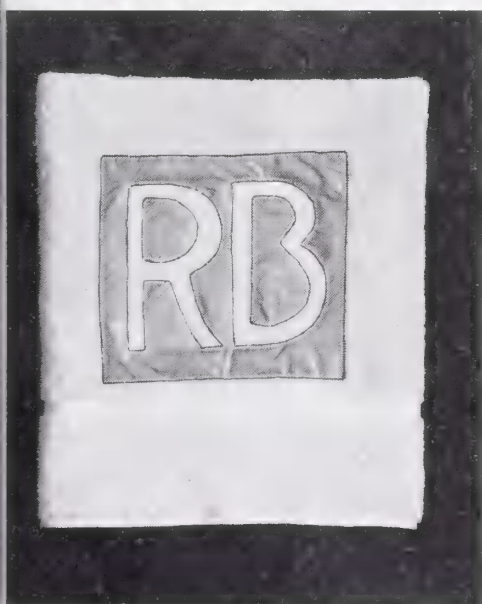

The linen towel (above) looks like finest hemstitching. Pulled threads make openwork bands that are kept from ravelling by a zigzag stitch. This was embroidered on a Singer.

Sampler of stitches is a fine example of how effective repetition of the same stitches can be. There are actually only 23 different stitches here, yet effect is rich and diversified. In color combinations, you can see the endless possibilities for banding slip-cover skirts, for pillows and table and bed linen. These are possible with a Necchi.

Monogramming on heavy bath towel works lightning fast with Everfast chintz cutouts, held in place along block with a feather stitch. Imperial Martex towel, Elna machine.

Your sewing servant appliques with finesse and durability. Monogram of satin ends with flourishes of satin stitch which also holds down the fabric. Made on Singer Automatic.

The material you use, along with the thread, changes character of embroidery. Bordering bands are done with a coarse cotton thread on hand-woven Mexican cotton.

Frosty and refreshing, smooth and delicately flavored Canteloupe Freeze clings to the dasher of this handsome, copper-trimmed electric ice cream freezer by Silex. ## A reviving art: making your own ice cream

Thanks to electric freezers and electric ice crushers, it takes no muscle to make better ice cream than you can buy

Among America's favorite desserts, ice cream takes second place only to pie. How much of the latter's popularity can be traced to the à la mode serving is a question. But it's certain that the delicacy, which Charles I of England once reserved for the exclusive use of the royal table, is today a typically American dessert. More ice cream is consumed in these United States than anywhere else in the world. And with ice cream production at an all-time high, the home-made ice cream of nostalgic memories—the special treat in grandma's day at family gatherings, church socials and harvest picnics, is enjoying a glorious revival. Today's electric ice crushers and electric ice cream (Please turn to page 184)

You may select chopped, shaved or crushed ice if you have an Oster Ice Crusher.

Sweden that inspire a child's imagination

By ROBERT MOSHER

When we are young, it takes no effort of the imagination to build a great fortress out of sand, to dream galloping horses in the scudding clouds. But slowly that age of fantasy gives way to an age of realism, many times brought on by our own adult presents of playthings that stifle the child's imagination by being too literal, too realistic. How often do we see a child turn from a toy truck, for instance, with all the equipment of a real one, to an old cigar box, which is truck, plane, boat, everything?

Here in the fanciful constructions of Swedish designers are things to fire the imagination, to take a child through the difficult age of adolescence, when fantasy is most subject to atrophy and the gift of dreaming may be lost forever, to an adulthood with an unimpaired sense of romance, adventure and invention.

Here, too, are ideas that might rekindle the imagination of an adult, recall for him the half-forgotten world of childish wonder. Here are ideas that might urge him toward a jaunt of exploration, along with his children, in search of driftwood to be turned into a tall, ranging giraffe or a giant rabbit, a log into a galleon, a hippopotamus or nothing at all. It might be kept as a weathered form, a point of departure for playful dreams, to be changed by the fancy into one thing or another.

The New Musical Culture

To partake of it freely is the pleasure and privilege of the person of culture.

And what a pleasant privilege it is!

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

In the course of my work, I have come to know a number of artists in the world of music. I know one conductor who is a marvelous musician, an artist of the first rank, possessing comprehensive musical knowledge. As a man, however—well, as a man he is extremely limited. He has practically no interests outside of music: what does interest him is petty gossip, plentiful eating, and a little trouble-making. I do not believe he has read a book in years, and as for looking at a painting, you couldn't drag him near one.

I know another man who responds with heart and soul, with every quiver of his nerves, to musical experience. He himself will tell you that he knows nothing at all about music. He is right: he knows nothing. But he loves it, loves it with blind affection and little discrimination. He has only the vaguest ideas of what period Chopin lived in, and I am sure he could not tell you whether Ravel or Debussy was the older composer. He cannot read a note or play an instrument.

Which of these two men is the more "cultured"? You answer the question. I've got my own idea. Let's use the answer as a convenient springboard for the observation that it is possible to be musically knowledgeable, to have the specialist's discernment, the technician's critical judgment, the professional's assurance; in short, to know music as a plumber would know the drainage system, without being in the least cultured. Knowledge of an art as a craft is no assurance of a rounded personality or of that fullness and sensitive equilibrium which denotes the cultured man.

However, this rule doesn't work the other way. I know of no one to whom I would apply the word "cultured" who does not in one way or another, to some degree or another, respond to music. Shut music out, do without it, and you are a person partially blind to the panorama of living, partially deaf to the voices of life. You live on a special diet instead of partaking in full. This may not be a bad definition of culture: the ability to partake in full.

What is the use of art? What is the use of music? Art sensitizes our skins, sharpens our perceptions, deepens our emotional responses. If it means anything at all to us, it serves us by helping us to live heedfully. (Please turn to page 149) their journey south, some of them pouring over the horizon by the thousands like black smoke from an unseen volcano. We had never seen so many butterflies before as those that fluttered above the flowers on our terrace, and were astonished to read that some of these delicate creatures also migrate annually to warmer lands. The clouds and constellations, which my husband as an old sailor knows familiarly by name, are now becoming my friends as well.

REFERENCE books are piled high on our tables, and we are exploring the nature shelves at our library for more to read aloud. It fascinates us to watch deer, pheasants, woodchucks and other wild life while sitting in armchair comfort, though it seems almost wrong when we read stories of naturalists lying on cold, rough ground for hours to catch sight of some creature. Not that we see the families in their burrows or learn all the secrets of their daily life, as the patient scientist does in the field. But we surely get as much fun out of watching the deer eating apples at the edge of our lawn, or a greedy cock-pheasant in all his stunning plumage consuming every bit of seed we had put out on the ground for the smaller birds.

One night, sitting at supper by candlelight with the floodlight illuminating the terrace beyond the window, we suddenly saw a pair of foxes run across the grass. Soon they reappeared romping almost under our eaves, quite oblivious to the brightly lighted stage with its unseen audience.

Watching the wing patterns of so many birds against the sky has sent us in search of information about bird flight. Birds are as varied in their journeys through the air as are people walking down a city street. Some cut straight through to their destinations; others pause and seem to watch what goes on below; and still others, like the gay gold-finches, go dipping merrily along full of gay chatter and song.

The swallows remind me of skiers soaring off after a long jump, for they seem to take off from the roof just over our heads.

One morning after a heavy rain we watched a hawk sitting immobile for some twenty minutes with his great wings outstretched, drying them off in the first rays of the sun. Books like Gordon C. Aymer's Bird Flight, with its exciting photographs, make one begin to understand something of wing structures and appreciate the variety and beauty of fluid line which has never yet been equaled by man. Seeing birds soaring and taking advantage of wind currents reminded me of Hannah Reitsch's autobiography, Flying Is My Life, in which she describes so vividly the ecstasy of sail-planing alone, of watching for birds to point out to her the best updrafts of air to raise her ever higher.

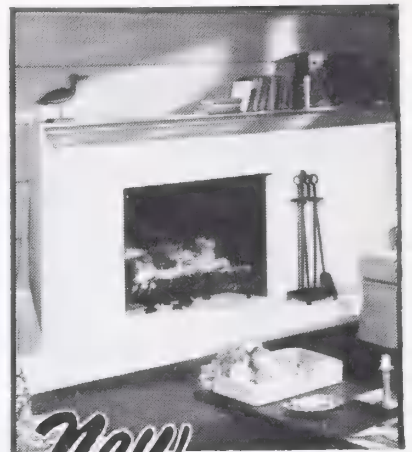

The pictured changes of weather and seasons on our windows is another constant delight to us. Years ago when we lived in Puerto Rico we enjoyed watching the great fluffy clouds along the horizon and the changing light on the mountains from dawn to sunset. But there was no variety in the tropical foliage of grapefruit trees and palms; they were always green.

HERE WE have staged for us a drama with an unending number of settings, each different and fascinating in its own way. In the fall, the edges of our meadows are bright with goldenrod and purple asters. The deepening colors on the trees, suddenly more brilliant one morning than ever before, are perhaps the climax of the play. Yet I am not one of those unfortunates who bemoans the time of falling leaves as a sad season. I love to watch them whirling in the wind, and as the trees become more bare I make new discoveries: There are houses on distant hills that I had not seen before, and the great

New FIREPLACE

Circulates Heat . . .
Warms All the Room

Especially designed for the modern home, the new Heatilator Fireplace is the only fireplace that gives you all 3 of these features . . .

● Circulates Heat. Cool air from floor level is warmed in the double walled firebox—then circulates gently to every corner of the room, even adjoining rooms.

● Will Not Smoke. A scientifically designed steel form, the Heatilator unit does away with guess-work and rule-of-thumb construction methods. Adds little to cost of finished fireplace.

● Damper Seals Air-Tight. The new Pressure-Seal Damper seals the chimney throat air-tight when the fireplace is not in use. No costly house heat escapes up the chimney. No chimney downdrafts can chill the room. And in the air-conditioned home, it is an absolute necessity to prevent the loss of expensive summer cooling as well as winter warmth.

Ideal for every purpose . . .
homes, basement rooms, camps or cabins. Ask your building material dealer or mail coupon for free booklet.

NATURE IN OUR LIVING ROOM

trunks of ancient oaks nearby are now splendid in their stark lines. Roads appear that were once hidden, birds' nests show up in trees, the stiff little catkins remaining on the birches make a decorative design, once blurred by many leaves.

BARE BRANCHES against the sky or a full moon over the black hilltop tracery of winter trees make me reach for some of my choice books of old scissor-cuts. I am always amazed at the fine lines these artists could preserve with their skilled hands, and looking at the delicacy of the trees they reproduced brings me to a much fuller appreciation of nature's own silhouette artistry.

Studying trees without their leaves has taught me much about their form of growth, and I am constantly surprised at the variety of colors visible all winter long in their branches. Until we sat at these windows, I had no idea there were so many delicately rosy twigs, so much yellow besides that of the willows, nor so many buds evident long before the arrival of spring. I had always hibernated during the cold months, turning my back on all the beauty of our winter landscapes, peering out only when there was a beautiful snowstorm or ice sparkling on the trees. How much I have been missing!

The occasional thick fogs give me a strange feeling of mystery, as if their curtain had shut me off entirely from the real world and some sudden rift might show me an eerie magic realm. There is an absolute quiet about such a day that reminds me of the uncanny stillness during black-out alerts of the last war. I would not want to walk about in the fog, but I thoroughly enjoy its quality from behind my glass walls. The clouds of dust before a summer squall, the sunshine lighting up distant hills through curtains of rain nearby—all are captivating to watch, stimulating to the imagination, giving one a feeling of swoops of endless space.

I truly wish we had more snow here in the winter, for it changes the picture so completely and produces ever new wonders. A snowstorm at night brings our terrace floodlight into play so that we can watch the glistening bits whirled and tossed in the air currents under our deep eaves. Each shrub and tree has its own way of catching the flakes: The little white pine near the window collects them into wads of cotton in cupped needle-fingers; the hemlocks bear their soft loads lightly, ready to let them slip softly to the ground at the first touch of sun or breeze. The wild cedars, which I had at first thought ugly, amuse me with their clumsy, clownish attitudes under heavy snow costumes.

We eventually do tire of the long winter months. I wander from window to window, looking at my flower beds and shrubs to see whether their straw mulch is blowing away, and planning for spring when I can garden again. I watch my husband out there pruning our apple trees, shaping their forms with an artist's eye. Even when the winter rains beat upon the glass, I look out dreamily planning the flowers to be planted soon, deciding where we can best admire the berries of a mountain ash, the dark foliage of a purple-leaved plum.

God made the hills and valleys of our distant view, but we ourselves can design and shape the garden pictures close at hand. The terrace is surrounded by banks of iris. We chose iris not only for their exquisite flowers, but because the pattern of their leaves (sword-lilies, the Germans call them) define the terrace edges from spring throughout the fall. Here and there in the border we planted new varieties of day-lilies that open at sunset and do not close until sunset the next day. We enjoyed their golden brilliance under our evening floodlight, as well as against the soft blue of the hills during the day. Close to the windows we placed evergreen shrubs that grow low upon the ground; they will never interfere with the framing of our views, yet give welcome green to look at throughout the year.

THEN ONE day new birds are at our feeding stations, and our windows disclose the first pastel colorings of spring. Its color and form are much too delicate to be captured in paint or words. We watch almost with bated breath, fearful that the violent winds might discourage all these tiny leaves and tear them into threads, yet somehow they survive. Soon the wild cherries, hawthorns and viburnums are blossoming down the hill, the dogwoods extend branches layered with white, and the apple trees are in full bloom all around the house.

Our windows have changed the actual routine of our days. Even before I get out of bed I can see the foliage on the nearby hills and enjoy the sunrise colorings in the sky. Only those who have been ill for months at a time can truly appreciate the joy of a bedroom with large expanses of window looking out into unspoiled country.

As my husband and I go about the house, we may stop suddenly at the living-room window to enjoy a mother doe with her fawns as they graze quietly just below the terrace. My husband proudly notes the progress of his new lawn, while I inspect each flower bed under the windows to exclaim over seedlings just come up or blossoms newly opened. Even among kitchen tasks our eyes stray constantly through the big window to an awakening world of fields and hills, cloud formations, birds in flight. Before bustling off for a day in the city, such moments are of real value, for as Emerson said, "We require such a solitude as shall hold us to its revelations when we are in the street." I look forward all day to coming back to our windows with their healing peace.

EVEN IF I am at home all day, whenever I feel tired, too hurried or troubled, I take a few moments to sit before the living-room window looking at "the hills from whence cometh my help," restoring my spirit. I cannot help wondering what life would have been in a house like our present one, when we were bringing up our children. Wouldn't there have been many moments when one glance out of these great windows would have restored my peace of mind, given me a greater serenity to share with them and strengthen them, too? Would this not have given me some of the values so needed by young mothers and summarized so beautifully by Anne Lindbergh in her Gift From The Sea: "Space for significance and beauty. Time for solitude and sharing. Closeness to nature to strengthen understanding and faith in the intermittency of life: life of the spirit, creative life, and the life of human relationships"?

We look forward to sundown, my husband and I, when we can sit quietly together over tea or sherry and talk about our small happenings, watching the sunset glow and the light fade out until the hills gradually disappear. As it gets dark, friendly windows light up in the distance, planes wink their signals at each other as they pass back and forth, and an occasional tall shaft of a searchlight wanders about picking out clouds and losing them again in the blackness. As we eat our dinner by candlelight looking out at the stars, we bow our heads in thanks that we may live so closely surrounded by the beauties of God's world.

This Green World, by Rutherford Platt. Dodd, Mead, 1954. Photographs. $6. An indispensable book about the growth and structure of trees and flowers, also identification of trees in winter, etc.

Those of the Forest, by Wallace Byron Grange. Flambeau Publishing Co., Babcock, Wis., 1953. $4.50. A book to be read slowly and marked well for future reference. It is full of information on wild life in Wisconsin in one particular preserve, from day to day.

THE IDEAL MUSIC FOR YOUR LIVING ROOM

How to listen to chamber music? The best way is to listen to it as music. This is not so simple as it sounds. Many people have to rely on a story or on extra-musical facts of one kind or another. Forget all the talk and all the props. Just settle back and listen. And don't make a career of listening; leave that to the critics. But when you do listen, listen! Let the music flow through you until it is part of you. Then put it away, and after a while such hearings you will have an old musical friend. Each additional hearing, until death do you part, will turn up additional beauties. You cannot grow tired of a great string quartet; it is inexhaustible. You can respond to a Mozart string quartet, you can respond to a Beethoven string quartet. There is really no technical difference between a quartet and a symphony except in the number of players involved. Mozart is a fine composer with whom to walk hand in hand into the world of chamber music. So is Schubert. So is Beethoven except for the last five quartets.

If I were starting a collection of chamber music discs I would begin with music of strong melodic appeal, harmonic richness and emotional warmth. A work like Schubert's "Trout" Quintet for piano and strings is ideal. Its opening movement, with its irresistible upward flourishes from the piano, bubbles along with constant invention. When the soaring melody of the slow movement starts its insinuating caress, wandering from key to key and plaintively sighing, the effect is positively melting.

Genius works with simple means.

Eastern makes the rods that make the window!

There's more to an attractive window than meets the eye. Our hostess is holding the "beauty secret" of her picture window . . . Eastern's Duotrax Traverse Rod. It's two tracks in one rod . . . right and left draperies ride on separate tracks . . . smoothly . . . can't jam or stick! Extends to 200". Just one of Eastern's "window wonders" at your favorite department, hardware or variety store.

(Below) Eastern's Coronet Combination Traverse & Valance Rod carries both draw draperies and valance. One ingenious fixture that does the work and adds the glamour of two! Extensions to 150".

Schubert's writing here is clear and transparent, but every note forms an organized and unforgettable pattern that soon will sink into your memory as if etched upon it. The variations from which the quintet derives its name are flashing and brilliant, with a piano part that is sheer jugglery. Notes are showered like so many rainbow-colored droplets.

THE LAST three string quartets by Schubert also will provide a nucleus for a collection of chamber music. These three quartets, available in a single three-disc album, are the products of a man who very likely was the most natural melodist who ever lived. For concentrated, unflagging lyricism there is nothing exactly like these works. You need know nothing at all about music to respond to their perfect melodic arches—here, I promise, you will have a truly great experience.

The first two of the set—the “A Minor” and the “Death and the Maiden” Quartet—have a family resemblance in their elegiac sadness. The last one, in G major, has an extra dimension. It is stronger, more broadly conceived, thicker in texture, with agitated tremolos and massive quality found nowhere else in Schubert's chamber music. At that, the slow movement of this G major returns to the simplicity of the earlier quartets, and there is no more touching expression of sadness and resignation anywhere in music. Not just in Schubert's music; in anybody's music.

What a wealth of material to explore in the repertoire of chamber music! Take Beethoven, whose sixteen quartets are the cornerstone of it. His six quartets of Op. 18 are fledgling works. But already a new voice has here begun to proclaim mightily; and in Op. 59, the three “Rasoumovsky” Quartets, so named because they were composed for a Russian prince of that name, the thunderer is in full cry. Not that the music is loud; chamber music never is. But the message is titanic, and listening to this music you get the impression of size, of a spirit that wants to overspill. Yet this man who swept away all musical convention could also express pity and tenderness, as you will discover in the slow movement of the F major Quartet (Op. 59, No. 1). He also had sheer animal spirits, and the kinetic finale of the last “Rasoumovsky” Quartet has been leaving listeners limp for over a hundred years. You breathe a little faster when the movement is over, and your pulse races in emphatic response. This is music of unbounded virility; and that, perhaps, is the key to all Beethoven. He was the most masculine of composers—strong, proud, exulting in his strength.

The last five Beethoven quartets offer certain problems. The composer was in a different world when he wrote them. This is not a figure of speech. Because of his deafness, and because of his psychotic temper, Beethoven was removed from normal humankind and lived in a tonal world of his own, his brain tormented by mighty ideas that he struggled to get down on paper. His voice in these works alternates between cryptic statements and extensive developments. There are explosions of titanic energy and a type of symbolism that push the art of music to as introverted a sphere as it has ever attained. All that was, and all that was to be, is contained in these Beethoven quartets.

NONE OF them is easy to comprehend, but you will be missing music's Parnassus if you do not make the effort. Each of us has his favorites among the last five quartets. Mine is the C sharp minor (Op. 131, with its opening contrapuntal passages, seemingly so vague; but on familiarity so magnificently organized), the wild, darting four-note theme that later occurs; the profundity of the slow movements, the fevered propulsion of the finale.

You will get out of all his music exactly what you put into it. It contains the summation of Beethoven's musical and emotional (and very possibly religious) experience and you must give it the respect it deserves. But as you enter Beethoven's world through the last five quartets you will find your own world enriched and expanding.

This tweed carpet is a smart investment— AVISCO is the reason

You buy carpeting for keeps, so you look below the stunning surface. Avisco rayon fibers, especially planned for carpet use, make more than beauty possible.

The high-quality standards of Avisco rayon aren't limited to the basic fiber, but apply to construction and depth and density of pile as well. That's why superb value is symbolized by the Avisco Integrity Tag. That tag is awarded only to tested and approved carpeting, no matter what its price.

Take Roxbury's South Tweed, for example. It looks handsome, behaves handsomely (home or commercial shampooing leaves it resilient) and it costs only about $7 a yard. For quality carpeting at any price, look for carpeting that bears the golden Avisco Integrity Tag.

Art does not guarantee the good life; it does, however, guarantee a more intense life. It drives us on to explore the great emotions and the universally applicable thoughts which its practitioners have produced. Such exploration never comes to an end. Art, then, is an exercise in dissatisfaction. It is a setting-up exercise which leads to exhilaration.

Now, the cultured response to art is made up of both knowledge and emotion. We need to combine the two men, the musician and the amateur. We need to combine the sensuous with the intellectual, and find the proper equilibrium. All emotion without knowledge might easily become hysterical. All knowledge without emotion makes Jack a dull boy. But of the two ingredients the ability to respond with our senses seems to me the more important. In the end there is really only one valid test: It is the goose-pimple test. It is the ability to look at a painting and be overwhelmed by it so that you forget where you are, forget that your feet hurt; it is the ability to listen to the last movement of Brahms' Fourth Symphony and feel your face become flushed and perspired, forgetting that you are sitting in an uncomfortable chair.

I am deeply convinced that all arts are interrelated. The music lover may not be particularly interested in sculpture or poetry. But if he were interested, he would respond. The sensitizing process which allows us to be receptive is not turned on and off at will. True, "you can't know everything," but you are either receptive or you are not. Culture does not belong to the specialist.

In some ways, however, music offers the most inviting road to culture. Being so largely an art of emotion, it enables us to make our responses pliable, fluid, and quick acting. It is the least earthbound, the most general of the arts. It does not tell a story, has no plot, does not portray a subject. It is not bound to any one language and need not be translated. It has nothing to do with "real life" and therefore helps us marvelously well (Please turn the page)

How to find time for your mate by KitchenAid

Actually you're still the same person you were when you married... you still like to go places together... do the things you used to do... or maybe ask somebody over. But what about those everlasting stacks of dirty dishes?

Simple! Let KitchenAid take over... automatically, to give you the time to do all those things, together! But, why a KitchenAid? Aren't dishwashers pretty much the same?

You might ask your friends who own a KitchenAid... or a dealer... why a KitchenAid is different! They'll show you how it washes and rinses—with the big, exclusive Hobart revolving wash arm that works so thoroughly... the only dishwasher that washes odd shaped pieces like gravy boats, salt and pepper shakers or crystal chandelier parts. It dries—with a separate power-blower that leaves no cloudy areas. No other dishwasher has these exclusive features.

'Nuff said. Except, of course, that your new KitchenAid comes in any style you wish. So you can be sure it will fit your kitchen as it fits your way of life—beautifully!

There is a practical consideration, too: Music in our country today is easily available, so easily in fact that you can hardly avoid it. I call your attention to a new and very stimulating book by Jacques Barzun, dean of the Graduate School of Columbia University. The little book is entitled Music in American Life. Barzun speaks of "music unlimited," and sketches the role of the machine, the mass media of communication, the radio, the record, and the juke-box in present-day culture. He feels that the music made available by the machines falls on such willing ears because we are experiencing today "an increasing resistance to words" and we desire to skip from the world of words.

THERE is but one way to learn to use and to enjoy music: That is to listen to it. No amount of reading about it, no amount of explanation will provide a substitute. Only the thing itself, experienced in full, can evoke a true response. All short cuts are fakes. You must give yourself up to the experience of listening without the fear of not understanding the music and without the restriction engendered by the feeling that the music is "over your head." Over your head and into your heart—that's quite possible. Certainly, often the music will be over your head in the sense that you cannot keep your mind on it, that you float through it in a vague way, and that occasionally you will even be bored. But the more you listen, the more you learn how to concentrate, the less will you be bored and the more frequently will you respond.

I believe that the beginner in music should listen to a relatively limited repertoire, experiencing each composition a number of times. The twice-told tale is the best musical story. The more familiar you are with a piece of music (I am assuming that we are talking of good music), the more you will enjoy it. Unlike a book, which you read once or at the most twice, music can stand frequent repetition. Remember also that what you hear is not music but the work as interpreted by a performer. The various interpretations further assure your continued interest. Really you won't enjoy a composition to the full until you know it. And that is why records are so effective, why millions of new phonographs have been installed in homes, why the record business is growing at such a rapid pace.

As a balance to listening, we should consider making music. At the height of the Renaissance, the cultured man or woman did not specialize. He was expected to paint, to write poetry and to play music. That ideal is practically unattainable in our age. But one need not go to the other extreme, the extreme of passiveness, and have the machine to do everything.

Being able to play a musical instrument is another way of sensitizing our ability to respond to art—and that is true even if you play badly. Here, too, the statistical evidence is heartening. Obviously the fact that the sale of musical instruments has increased sharply, even within the last three or four years (the latest figures show sales this year 15 per cent ahead of last year, which is quite a lot!), is an index to the growth of our culture. The standard piano, still the most popular of all musical instruments, is at least holding its own in sales. The small piano is increasing in popularity, along with the small electric organ. In addition, waves of popularity for this or that simple musical instrument sweep at one time or another over the country. These fads often die as rapidly as they spring up. We've had sudden crazes for the recorder, then for the guitar, and now for the accordion. People want to play; to be sure, they want to play without having to practice and they're looking for short-cuts. But the desire is there—and that's the most important thing.

MANY thousands of people today harbor a passionate love for music. Music is their all-consuming hobby, their major interest after nine-to-five. There is hardly a town in our country without some sort of music-making, if only a small amateur group. Records can be bought in the supermarket or ordered by mail. Naturally, all this enthusiasm is delightful. But, as I have said, even greater promise for cultural health lies in music as being an introduction to other arts, to all art. The function of art is to turn detail into order, to bind many small experiences into a garland of significance, to give dimension to the flatness of every day. To partake of it in full is the privilege of the cultured human being. And what a privilege it is!

surging passion in his chamber music. Mozart's time was not ripe for it, nor did Mozart have the revolutionary instincts of Beethoven. Yet the D minor String Quartet is, in a way, a revolution in miniature, pointing right at the romantic movement that was to come a half-century later.

This D minor Quartet is one of the six so-called "Haydn" Quartets, a group of works that Mozart dedicated to his elder contemporary. (Haydn listened to them in peer amazement and then told Mozart's father: "Before God and an honest man I tell you that your son is the greatest composer known to me either in person or by name." An unselfish tribute from a very great composer and very great man.)

ALL OF the Mozart quartets from Nos. 14 to 23 are miracles of design and pellucid writing. So are his magnificent series of string quartets; don't miss the String Quartet in G minor, which is the chamber-music counterpart of the minor Symphony: the same inimitable grace, the same melodic inspiration, the same workmanship and imagination. And the Clarinet Quintet can bring you to the threshold of tears.

A note about the lists on page 101: I have selected 60 discs and album sets that encompass a complete repertoire from the first composer to write string quartets as we know them today (Haydn) to some of our contemporaries. The list is divided into three categories. A and B are bread-and-butter, the all-time classics. Perhaps List A is, on the whole, a little more assimilable than List B (though some items on the latter are there for the purely arbitrary reason that there was no room for them on List A). List C contains some items somewhat off the classical mainstream, but not one work on it lacks interest.

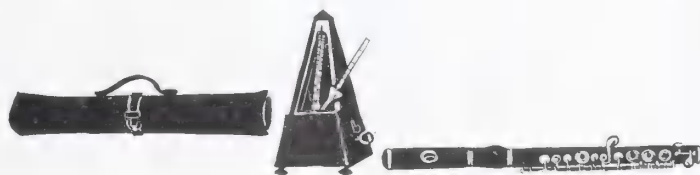

Certain works should be singled out as basic to any collection of Chamber music. Schubert, Mozart and Beethoven come first. The Haydn quartets: happy music, humorous music, not a neurosis within miles; and such compositional mastery! Schumann's Piano Quintet, an apex of multi-hued romanticism. The Brahms Clarinet Quintet, with its low-pitched autumnal beauty (one of the supreme masterpieces). Dvorak's Piano Quintet, the sunniest, jolliest piece of its kind in the repertoire, and if it does not make you wiggle with pleasure, your emotions are probably calcified. Try it: it's a real "sleeper" that many collectors have passed over, ignorant of its marvelous spirit and its pleasant melodic appeal.

Modern music may not be everybody's cup of tea. Those interested in sampling the best of the modern chamber music repertoire are hereby directed to the six Bartok quartets, preferably Nos. 4 or 5. They explore a new universe of sound. Bartok, a mild little man, was a tiger in his music, lashing out with abandon and not caring if his claws drew blood. He reveled in dissonances and odd effects like sweeping glissandi (slides) on the strings. His is not "pretty" music to listen to, but what's a phonograph for? You can play the music in short doses, familiarize yourself with the unconventional ideas and build up your toleration for dissonances.

IT MAY well be that these Bartok quartets, to a certain type of mind, may supply an emotional and intellectual jolt that will shake the listener to his molars. It may also be that some listeners will never respond to his message. We all bring to music our own backgrounds and prejudices, and Bartok may be too wild for tastes conditioned by the nineteenth-century idiom. If so, no great harm has been done. There are always Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms and the others, and they are good for a lifetime.

What we are saying is no more and no less than this: Culture begins at home, or it ends there. Unless the adventures of the human spirit become a part of ourselves, they have no meaning or existence; they might as well never have happened. We bring them (and ourselves) to life by bringing them home and making them our own. And once brought home, do they not then open up the whole wide world for us?

PLAY IDEAS FROM SWEDEN

And the creating of this fanciful play-yard sculpture can be fun for the whole family. The first step is to find the materials. They are all around you and often free for the taking, but you must learn to see them. Most of us have already unknowingly found some source of supply for materials.

How often, while on a jaunt to the country or sea shore, have you or your children seen in the silhouette of an old gnarled tree or a piece of driftwood the suggestion of a familiar or totally imaginary form? Next time this happens, stop and investigate. Maybe you have found the makings of a wonderful piece of playful sculpture.

And, too, the process of looking will open up a world of discovery. Look along the windswept beaches or down a back country road that you might never have bothered with before. The higher reaches of the mountains are rich with imaginary treasure. Possibly there is a field being cleared of trees near by. Never ignore the riches to be found in the city dump. Here, in the discards of others, you might find great treasure just waiting for you to reclaim it and produce some kind of a miracle.

However, there are some restraints you should observe. You should know just what you are looking for, so as not to waste time with inappropriate material.

First, if it is a tree-form you are out after, it should be thoroughly sound and free from rot and large checks or cracks. You should test each branch to be sure that it is strong enough to take the abuse of strenuous play, for if one should break while a child is on it, serious injuries could result. Actually it is wise to avoid tree sections that are very old and brittle.

Next you should look for forms that can be pruned and smoothed into interesting compositions; of course, the more imaginative the original form, the more romantic will be your result.

If you should find a discarded barrel as shown on page 134, the same qualifications of soundness should apply. The principal things to avoid are splinters, large cracks and jagged points upon which children could easily harm themselves.

After you have collected the materials out of which you plan to create such fanciful fun, let yourself go. Everything is possible: a sly crocodile, a brutish boar, a big horned what-have-you. So make the most of them.

Putting it all together will require a few basic tools and materials, all of which can be obtained from the local lumber yard or building supply dealer.

FIRST, assemble the pieces, removing all loose bark and smoothing off the rough edges with a sharp chisel or heavy rasp. Cuts necessary to make teeth, eyes, ears or jagged tail should be planned so that these features will not break off with use. So, don't try to make the details too fine in scale. Let them be simple, stylized suggestions of the effects you want.

For example, two big creases cut in the end of a log, one perpendicular to the other, forming an upside down T, will suggest a nose and mouth more effectively than a number of smaller, more realistic attempts. Remember that you are creating an effect out of rough material and because of this you should work in the nature of the material itself.

AFTER YOU are satisfied with the components, you will be ready to assemble them. Generally speaking, your animals will be more stable, if their legs can be well anchored. Therefore, you should plan the legs 30 inches to 3 feet longer than you will want them to appear so that part of them go securely into the ground. Don't pour concrete around them; simply bury them, taking care to tamp the earth firmly around each leg, applying some water as you do so. This will help to compact the earth. When wooden members are set into concrete in a position where moisture is present, the concrete will hold the moisture and rot the wood. In normal soil, without concrete, moisture will drain away. It is a good idea to thoroughly soak the portions of the legs that will be buried with a creosote preparation, but take great care not to let the oil get on exposed parts of the legs, since it will stain the children's clothing.

To connect the various parts of your animals, have your lumber dealer cut one-half-inch round reinforcement steel in 6- and 8-inch lengths. (He has a cutter that can do this easily so don't attempt to do it yourself.) Now drill holes into each of the two pieces you wish to join in such a manner that the steel dowels can form a joint.

You may have to experiment a little with the size of the holes, as you will want them to be tight, just the right size so you can drive in the dowels without splitting the wood. Where you are joining large legs, eight inches or more in diameter, you may need two dowels in each joint. This will take a little care in drilling the holes to be sure that they align, since you will split the wood, if you force the dowels into holes that are too far out of line.

If reinforcement steel is not available, you may use half-inch steel pipe for the dowels. However, the reinforcement steel is better, because it has a pattern of lugs on its surface that create a more positive bond with the wood than the smooth-surface pipe.

Where smaller pieces of wood are to be joined, you can buy 30 penny nails. Holes just a little smaller than the nails should be drilled completely through the first piece to be joined and a little into the second to avoid splitting. If you have some very special conditions of joining your logs that the dowel method here described does not solve, you should consult your lumber or hardware dealer. He has a number of ingenious devices used in the building trade, one of which may solve your problem.

The end result should be a firm, self-sustaining structure that will take the wear and tear of strenuous play, and in no way inhibit the exercise of mind or body.

COLOR can be applied in the form of exterior wood stains. There is a large selection of these which can be combined to create effects from pink noses to purple tails. Keep in mind that these are objects of nature in nature. So use colors subtly, keep the tones low in scale and grayed. As a final finish over the stain apply a clear wood preservative such as "Wood Life" or any other of the similar products on the market. This will soak in without leaving a shiny surface and will protect the wood from becoming water soaked. Apply succeeding coats, one each six months.

for the shrub border. From her old garden Miss Cook selected only those trees and shrubs which had given her top-notch ornamental performance with a minimum of ailments. No trees with shedding bark or an annual cascade of fruits or seed pods to be cleaned up, no chronic magnets for insects. She took, quite literally, the cream of the crop, the best of the plants she had known, and arranged them in informal, easily cared for groups.

Among the pines and spruces, which provide a year-round, fine-textured green background for the garden, are such flowering shrubs as doublefile viburnum, snowball, lilac, enkianthus, Thunberg spiraea, azaleas, dogwood and pyracantha, all relatively trouble-free, as well as the rose Else Poulsen, which blooms generously all summer. Phlox and Aster-Frikarti give summer color to the border. In the foreground a low clipped hedge and incidental taxus plants give year-round definition to the garden. So carefully have the evergreen and deciduous plants been combined, the garden never looks bare, even in winter.

3. Take advantage of power equipment. The low taxus hedges which define Miss Cook's garden in strong green lines and do so much to give it a feeling of perfection take only two leisurely hours each to clip with her handy electric hedge trimmer.

Even more important in her garden scheme is the 25-gallon electric sprayer with which she douses trees and shrubs in one operation in mid-May, early June, and sometimes in early July.

Another favorite power tool of Nancy Cook is a lawn edger, which skims along the borders.

4. Make full use of modern garden chemicals. The garden chemical companies are Miss Cook's favorite friends. She uses their products plentifully and is always on the lookout for new chemicals which will do the job better in her garden.

With a lawn fertilizer cart she dusts the lawns with Scott's all-purpose Cope, which contains chlor-dane for the soil insects. She keeps fermate in one duster and, as the peonies which are grown for cutting push through the ground, she swoops down on them regularly with a cloud of this blight-controlling dust, DDT in another duster keeps insects off the phlox. But for the most part, the all-purpose early spring and summer sprays, plus a fall clean-up, keep pests from getting a toehold.

To increase the number of early fruit on her tomato plants, she sprays them with a hormone fixative as the blossoms open. Crag herbicide applied to the soil as a spray in early spring spells doom for germinating weed seeds and encourages the tidy growth of moss along the paths in the cutting garden. She advises careful reading of the label, however, as it cannot be used near some plants.

In the meadow and along the highway, maleic hydrazide also applied in early spring, slows up the growth of grass and eliminates constant mowing.

5. Keep things where you use them. Have water faucets and electrical outlets where they will be needed. This usually means one of each on each side of the house. To simplify watering the few potted plants, Nancy Cook keeps a large copper pitcher by the terrace faucet so she can give the plants a quick drink without uncoiling a hose.

Miss Cook has a penchant for having several of every worth-while tool so that there is at least one wherever she happens to be in the garden. A standing rule is to have hanging by each door of the house, a broom, duster, dust pan, trash container and, in winter, a snow shovel. In copper bowls on each terrace are twine, wire and small hand tools she might need for minor equipment adjustments or garden repairs. With things so handy, small tasks get done almost before she has thought about them.

In the main work center, all of the frequently used items are out on shallow shelves or brackets where they can be located at a glance. Here, too, she keeps extra supplies of everything from electric cords to spray nozzles.

Inside the tool house are the less frequently used shovels and forks, pruning equipment, a row of dusters hanging along the wall and such bigger equipment as the fertilizer cart, power sprayer, hedge trimmer, lawn mower. So carefully has she arranged her equipment that a stranger could find in three minutes any garden tools or supplies he needed.

6. Eliminate what isn't fun. If something is a bother, work out a better way to get the job done, or eliminate it entirely.

Instead of sowing seeds herself each spring and then nursing along the plants indoors, Nancy Cook gives the petunia, marigold and zinnia packets to a nearby nurseryman to start in his greenhouse. This way she doesn't have to think about them until the plants are ready to set out in the garden. Of course, this doesn't prevent her from indulging in an occasional whim by sowing a few other seeds out of doors later.

Hand watering is another thing of the past in Miss Cook's life. Sprinkler hoses left among the shrubs, two reel sprinklers for the lawns and an above ground irrigation system for the vegetable and cutting garden make watering almost as simple as turning on a nearby faucet.

She also skips over another job by periodically feeding the garden at the same time she waters it with a siphon-type plant food applicator attached to the hoses.

Weeding has been virtually eliminated by the application of Crag herbicide in early spring just as the weed seeds germinate and by a buckwheat hull or peat mulch which is later placed around plants in the cutting garden. Weeds long ago ceased to have a chance in the dense clover and bluegrass which crowds everything else out of her lawn. In the borders, shrubs shade out all but an occasional intruder which is easily pulled by hand.

This basic policy of getting rid of the troublesome extends into every aspect of the Cook garden covering, in addition to these big accomplishments, such a minor item as having a multitude of measuring utensils so that she doesn't have to stop and wash and dry a cup or spoon when preparing sprays or plant food solutions. It's much easier to wash everything at once when the day's gardening is finally complete.

7. Don't put a time limit on a job. Enjoy each small task as you do it. When tired or bored lie down on a nearby bench or enjoy a cool drink in the shade. Then go back to your work with renewed vigor. Because Miss Cook regards these relaxed moments of contemplation as some of the finest in gardening, she provides for them with tables and chairs or a bench with plump pillows in each area of the garden.

8. Keep ahead of the game. It is easier to pull a chance buckwheat sprout or other weed from the mulched area when it is tiny than later when roots will drag soil into the mulch. Keep dead flowers removed for neatness and conservation of the plants' energy as well as to prevent seedlings.

Prevent pests with the newest and most effective chemicals. Learn to snap off stray sprouts when you see them, either with the always handy pruning shears or better still, with your finger nail when they are still small. Clean up as you work by dumping debris into one of the ever-ready trash containers. Get into the proper habit of making a thorough fall cleanup of the garden.

Jellied Bortsch

- 2 cans Campbell's jellied consommé
- 1 can beet aspic salad (Glorietta, packed by Santa Clara Packing, San Jose)
- 1 cup hot water

Pour contents of three cans into a pan. Use hot water to rinse out cans to get all the remaining bits of consommé and beets. Heat this mixture to the melting point. Stir and mix well, then cover and put in refrigerator to get cold. You can make it two days ahead, for it must be made at least 24 hours before you are to serve it.

Spoon out into your serving dishes and top with seasoned sour cream and plenty of chives. You will need one carton of commercially soured sour cream and about a half cup of chopped chives.

You can go as far as you like in seasoning the sour cream, from just tossing in a teaspoon of Spice Islands Beaumonde seasoning powder and a tablespoon of cream to a wisp of garlic, sugar, tarragon vinegar (1 tablespoon) salt and pepper to taste. Serves six.

After everyone has finished the soup, whisk off the bowls, two at a time, returning with two casseroles. Take out remaining soup bowls—yours and the least important guest's.

Chicken Casserole à la Pink Cloud

For this easy-to-fix and delicious chicken casserole, you will need either four chicken breasts or two whole chickens, each just under three pounds. I prefer getting whole chickens and having them the night before for dinner, leaving the four breasts for the guests next day. The kids love the legs (how often I have wished the chicken was a centipede), Bob enjoys the second joint and I like the wings. So we enjoy the chicken for dinner while I am really getting it ready for the guests the next day.

Have the chickens cut in halves and butter them well and broil in the oven until done—or about an hour in a 300-degree oven. Serve the family and store the white meat in a covered container in the refrigerator. So your work is nearly all done.

- 4 chicken breasts
- 1 carton fresh mushrooms (6 oz.)
- 1 carton frozen peas
- 4 slices (thin) mild ham
- 2 rounded tablespoons chopped celery and leaves
- 2 rounded tablespoons chopped carrots
- 2 rounded tablespoons of chopped parsley
- 1 rounded tablespoon of chopped green onion
- Freshly ground pepper

You may use any of your favorite liquids for this chicken dish, and with these basic ingredients, you can vary the flavor tremendously just with the addition of a different liquid. If you like sour cream, then lightly salt your casserole (depending upon the saltiness of the ham) and add one-third cup of sour cream. This is a delicious dish. If you wish something quite different make a broth of 1 scant teaspoon of Sey-co's Soup Base Seasoning, a chicken concentrate, and add a third of a cup of boiling water to dissolve the concentrate. Season it with either 3 tablespoons of sherry (Pedro Domecq, La Ina) or Marsala.

USE enamel ware oval bakers for this chicken dish. My theme song is: "From stove to table with no change of container," for it saves dish washing. The ramekins should have covers, but if they don't you can cover them with foil wrap to keep in the good flavor.

Rub each casserole with the cut side of a clove of garlic. Then butter the casseroles well. Lay in the chicken, cover it carefully with the slice of ham. Wash the mushrooms by putting them in a bowl of water and rinsing off the dirt, then wiping them on a towel. Place them (whole) in the casserole, then place in the ice box until ready to put in the oven. The mushrooms will not darken in a few hours if carefully kept, so you can do this early in the morning. The celery, carrots, parsley, etc., can also be chopped the day before, so that all you have to do is to assemble all the ingredients, which takes only a few minutes.

Fifteen minutes before the guests are expected, turn on the oven to 350° F., get out the casseroles and fix the rest of the dish. Take out the frozen peas from the freezer, pound them into separate morsels with a wooden mallet before opening the package. Spoon the peas into each dish then add a heaping tablespoon of the finely chopped vegetables (carrots, celery, parsley and green onion) which have all been mixed. Top with a few slices of mushroom, sliced through cap and stem so they are in the shape of a "T". Pour over the liquid you prefer and pop into the oven for at least 45 minutes (an hour won't hurt). Serves four.

I like sourdough French bread served with this dish. As this menu has so many vegetables you do not need any additional one. Even a salad is not necessary. The sourdough French bread or rolls can be put on the table with butter and you can also eat it with the bortsch, if you prefer.

Anybody, man or woman, would like this dish. You'll find, once you try it, it will become a stand-by in your ever-expanding repertoire.

Now for the dessert. It's the kind of nonsense dear to the heart of women, but which men consider much ado about nothing. It's easy to make, and very effective, in the best maitre d'hotel manner of showmanship.

You will need as many coffee cans as you have guests, and an equal number of Pyrex custard cups about 3½ inches in diameter, for that allows a nice rim of ice around the glass, as the coffee can is 5 inches in diameter.

At least 24 hours before the party, you should start to make these individual ice containers. Take the same fruit that you are planning to serve, which are strawberries in this case. (I have done it with cherries.) Wash the berries but do not stem them. Put a layer of berries in the bottom of the can, then set the glass "liner" on this bottom layer. Then fill in with more fruit around the edges and fill with water. Freeze. This takes overnight at least.

I have kept them for a week or two with success, but you can't keep them for months, for the fruit color fades. In our climate it takes an hour and a half for the ice cake to thaw out enough to remove it from the tin. In hotter climates it will take a little less. Unmolding with hot water will work if you're quick about it.

Heap high in the holes left by the custard cups piles of just-washed, unstemmed strawberries. Sprinkle a very few drops of Kirschwasser over the berries. Serve with a silver sugar shaker of powdered sugar.

IF THE day is hot, serve iced coffee in stemmed glasses with a heavy cream float and a liqueur, such as brandy, flavoring the cream (about a tablespoon on top of the heavy cream).

So . . . you have had fun. And more to the point your guests have had fun, with this easy-to-fix but-with-a-dash-of-glamour luncheon. Pull yourself together and give more of them. For when you are geared to entertaining, it is a breeze. Practice makes you perfect!

wonders they have wrought on film in distant and exotic lands—or even last summer “up at the lake.” But we are not saddened because we haven’t a similar picture of ourselves in a gondolier’s hat or a shot of the guard changing at Buckingham Palace. What saddens us is something quite different.

We are so impressed by the technical know-how of our gifted friends, so green-eyed at their ability to get a picture that looks like what they photographed, that what we’re going to say sounds like sour grapes, and maybe it is. We simply wish that these talented, traveling people would bring a sharper, more sensitive eye and a little more imagination to the whole procedure of picture-taking, and we think they’d get a whole lot more fun out of their travels if they did.

If we knew all that stuff about speeds and distances and filters that George seems to know (we say to ourselves), we wouldn’t settle for that series starring Maudie at the Eiffel Tower, Maudie in the Roman Forum, Maudie at the Lincoln Memorial, standing there in every case looking like an ossified Bobbsey Twin.

IF WE were George (we think), we’d ponder a bit on the reason it’s worth the time and effort to take a camera on our travels. It really isn’t just to establish the fact that Maudie, like Kilroy, was there. It isn’t to make a record of the world’s most famous landscapes and monuments, for these have been endlessly printed in books and on postcards. It is, we think, to catch as much as possible of that ephemeral spirit of a place, that mysterious drifting together of intangible impressions that becomes what we call its atmosphere. The feel of the air, the manner of the people, the taste of the food, the smells, the sound of the language, the philosophy by which life is lived—to travel is to sense all these unphotographable intangibles as well as to see what is strange or beautiful or renowned.

This, we think, is what a traveler’s films should reflect, so that next year, five years, twenty years from now, one look at a picture will so awaken the memory of sounds, smells, manners, and meals that it’s almost as good as a second visit to the place.

George and his ilk would probably like to know how we’d set about capturing all this in a snapshot. Humbly, we submit that the first thing we’d do would be to eschew the obvious because the “typical” monuments seem to us to have become clichés that do not necessarily evoke the spirit of a place, at all. We wouldn’t photograph a thing that didn’t seem to have a personal message for us. We’d skip photographing anything just because everyone else was training cameras on it. Any time we got the urge to take a famous façade, we just wouldn’t, unless some unexpected facet of meaning came through to us personally—an architectural detail, an intriguing pattern, a color that delighted our soul. We’d rather walk around the block, keeping our eye peeled for a routine sight that might be a summing up of the life of the place—a tradesman’s sign, a cobbled street, a basket-weaver’s stall, a child in a doorway.

WHO can say what we’d find? We can only recall some of our own lost opportunities. If we’d had a camera in Brussels we’d have photographed windows, for we had never seen so many different styles of draping, swagging and stretching curtains.

In Copenhagen we would have photographed an unbusy barber jumping rope with a crowd of little girls outside his shop. We would have shot the street-crossing sign that says “Stop for blink,” and the shiny, complicated battery of knobs and faucets and showering gadgets in our immaculate bathroom in the Palace Hotel.

In Seville we would have photographed a display of magnificent braids and ball fringes and the family who makes them for the adornment of the matadors. At a sidewalk café we’d have tried to take a picture of tiny brown-roasted almonds and topaz sherry illuminated by evening sunshine.

In San Remo we would have snapped the pretty pink and dusty-green cascades of ice plant tumbling through the crannies of a common, skillfully made rock wall. And one July in France we would have committed to film what will always seem to us the symbol of a Gallic summer—a plate of fresh green almonds, their silvery, furry bloom glistening against the cool dark green of vine leaves.

We would, in short, seek out the vignettes rather than the panoramas. We would make our film collection a document of our highly personal, curiously magpie interests—cooking utensils, textiles, earrings, the textures of natural stone and masonry, the recurring universality of certain motifs which seems to argue that all men are brothers (Norwegian or Dutch design sometimes look Hindu; Mexican patterns sometimes look Egyptian). We'd like our films to remind us how other people serve meal, how they grow their flowers, how they roof their houses. For these are the kind of souvenirs that cost nothing at all, yet they may some day add immeasurably to the richness of the life we lead at home. And because they have intimate meaning for us, such pictures are the evocative ones that start that wonderful chain-action of recollection, which is one of the great rewards of travel.

To each his own, naturally. By all means we'd urge the Georges and the Maudies to follow their own bent and interests when they go forth with Baedeker and camera. But chiefly we'd urge Maudie to get out of the picture. And as for us, we're going to master our Minox and our light meter.

Annapolis open house

Annapolis, Maryland, this year, is going to celebrate Navy Day, October 27, with a tour of famous houses which have been influenced by the touch of Navy in their lives. Many of these lovely places are furnished with the heirloom furniture, china and bibelots brought back from the seven seas by their early naval-officer owners.

At the windows of the Slayton House visitors can see the exquisite "Tribute Silk," first presented to the Empress of China by her provinces, now the stuff of which dramas are made.

In connection with the day's tour there will be an Heirlooms Show of local collections. For more information write to the sponsoring society, Historic Annapolis, 64 State Circle, Annapolis, Maryland.

Brightest Ethiopia

Latest clue to the changing world we live in is Ethiopian Airlines' reminder that tourism in Ethiopia, former stronghold of the Queen of Sheba, is getting to be something to conjure with. And we can remember the time when we considered Ethiopia about as likely a stopping-off place as the planet Saturn.

Most visitors, we're told, head for the capital, Addis Ababa, then make trips into ancient outlying towns, like Axum, Sheba's capital city. This is marked by a curious, mystifying collection of huge granite obelisks that were probably not unknown to Solomon. And just to rattle your time sense a bit further, when you return to Addis Ababa, you may put up at the Ghion Hotel, which supplies guests with swimming pool, tennis courts and similar de luxe twentieth-century amenities.

Ethiopia, a country that sits 8,000 feet up in the world on a vast plateau, is said to have a climate similar to California, which may account for the current enthusiasm that has people building new hotels all over this ancient land. It is also a natural stop-over for travelers en route to East Africa or South Africa.

In case you have a Mediterranean cruise on the agenda, you might leave the cruise at Athens or Cairo to fly via Ethiopian Airlines Convair to the Sudan, Addis Ababa or Nairobi in Kenya. Or, if you'd like to put the final exotic touch to a world cruise by dropping over to Haile Selassie's domain for a few days, you can also fly here from Zanzibar or Aden.

First call for cruises

Speaking of Mediterranean cruises, Cunard has already opened the lists for reservations on the Britannic's 1957 winter cruise, which leaves New York on January 25 and spends the next 66 days calling at 23 ports in 19 Mediterranean-washed countries and England, which is her last stop before returning home. However, if you want to stay in England, do the theaters, the clubs and taste the dazzling pattern of a London season, that's all right, too, for Cunard will carry you back home later on any of its regular trans-Atlantic sailings. Cruise starts at $1,275.

BERMUDA

Bermuda is only twenty-four miles long, yet within its small area are any number of things which charm visitors into going back year after year.

Bermuda is a group of 365 islands. One for each day in the year, so Bermudians say. Sailing among them is a never-ending pleasure. Golf, tennis, fishing, cycling, picnicking are all-year sports. Bermuda's beaches are wide, pink and soft. The water is blue, inviting and refreshing. Bermuda's houses are unique—an artful blending of white roofs, pastel-coloured walls and massive chimneys. And flowers—Hibiscus, Oleander, Bougainvillea, Easter lilies—splash the Islands with brilliant hues.

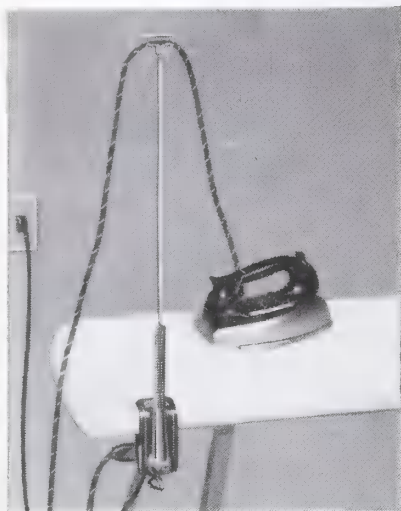

Bermuda is only 700 miles from the mainland. It's easy to get to for a holiday whether you go leisurely by ocean liner or speedily by plane. Living is simply solved, too, for the Islands' hotels are noted for their service, food, accommodations and sports facilities. And guest houses open wide their doors to Bermuda's easy way of living.

There are many details to be considered in planning any holiday. But you'll save yourself a lot of time and trouble by talking things over with your travel agent. Helpful too is the Bermuda Vacation Kit which you can get by writing to: The Bermuda Trade Development Board, 620 Fifth Avenue, New York 20, New York.

peating her grandmother's decorating mistakes. She's outspoken. "Are they still selling that puffy mud-colored stuff?" she asked. "Grandma had about six variations of it in her living room, all in different, practical shades of mud, covering everything but the Atwater-Kent." "Whose grandmother didn't?" said I. "But I'm talking about a different kettle of matelassé. This is J. H. Thorp's modern version of that enduring old fabric, with an over-all quilting pattern which looks to me like a hexagonal dewdrop. slight puff gives it a nice textural quality, and you could have it in any of 11 delicious clear colors besides a good oyster white. The pattern's called "Quilted Medallion," a very sensible motif for a matelassé, because the fabric is actually two layers of cloth woven and joined together simultaneously in the weaving process, rather like quilting, to begin with.

To make a long story short, my young client now has headboard, fitted bedcover, slipper chair and hassock in quilted matelassé and it looks as contemporary as tomorrow night. The only problem now is that I don't think the tough cotton stuff will ever wear out. It comes in 53" width.

Thought I'd never seen anything cleverer or a more philosophic comment on our time than the way the home-decorating coterie latched onto those shelves hung on metal strips which were originally invented for store display. Long, continuously perforated metal strips are attached vertically to a wall, metal brackets clutch into the perforations at any spot you want them, and then shelves are laid on the brackets. to fit your books and, should you move, to remove the whole kit and caboodle easily for installation somewhere else.

A great idea, all 'round, but I must say, until I paid a social call on a fellow-decorator, I was beginning to weary of seeing the same thing everywhere, in East End Avenue apartments or Bucks County farmhouses, always with the standard shiny silver metal strips and brackets, and shelves of natural wood or, for those who don't mind dusting, of glass.

This young lady, however, is a credit to her craft. In a room of strange metallic greens and zinnia colors, the identical serviceable shelves seemed to have turned to gold. Glamorized to the nines, their strips and brackets are finished in brass instead of steely white metal and the shelves themselves were covered, by her own hand, in golden Chinese tea paper. So now I'm off on a cloud of fantasy, visualizing every flat material I see as a possible covering for bookshelves. Leather, soft and pliable kid, is a natural. So would be vinyl plastic. And so, of course, is wallpaper itself. Think of marbleized papers, tortoise-shell papers, or the old-fashioned feather-pattern booklining paper you used to see in dictionaries. Who says that we're all standardized?

The question of whether or not to mix woods and periods in the same room has never occurred to Mrs. Ellington Adamson. Like her ancestors before her, she just does it. And she has plenty of variety to work with. In fact, every important piece in her dining room is inherited from a line of ancestors who have done their purchasing in the past directly from such diverse craftsmen as Paul Revere, Duncan Phyfe, William Savery and the unsung Chinese and Javanese artists who supplied her sea captain great-great-grandfather. It was through the old salt that she inherited a rather magnificent Chinese ebony bride's chest, which Mrs. A. has thoughtfully fitted out with flat trays for storing large linens. And from a Philadelphia great grandmother she has acquired the highboy in which she keeps her silver. This piece is enough to make the Reifsnnyder look to its laurels. But there are probably problems even in Paradise. The twister in this case is that the chest, if it has a failing, is such a low-standing piece that it emphasizes a bare expanse of wall above which no amount of picture hanging seemed able to cure. And, of course, it looked lower than ever with that towering highboy in the same room. I was brought on the scene, not to make these two pieces compatible, which they already are, but to unite them more plausibly in scale.

The catalyst turned out to be a set of the Albert Van Luit Company's hand-screened wall panels, in a steel-gray, subtly striated silk, presenting an elegant little pastoral of ducks gliding in marshy pools, strolling through the sedge grass and meadow flowers, lightheartedly flying over the water. A set of four panels completes the scene, and by putting the chest under the paneled wall, the mural serves to build up the background and make the eye forget how close to the floor the chest actually is. And since the scenic was an 18th-century wall covering device, all the other grand old pieces look very much at home.

The pattern is called "The Marshes" and the ducks, albeit strikingly oriental in character as ducks always seem to be, are 100% modern Americans. The highboy is set against a wall covered in solid gray silk, a perfect match to the panel background. Since the panels are silk-screened and colored to order, you can have your ducks and their background in any shades you'd care to choose. —M. G.

To keep walls dry

This job has two parts (1) To exhaust moisture directly to the outdoors via special vents from the major moisture-producers in the kitchen, laundry and bath. (2) To find and correct all leaks that let rain water get behind the paint film. Neither job is difficult or expensive, but until both are done, you might as well not bother trying to paint the house.

To exhaust the moisture directly, so it never gets into the wall:

1. Install and use exhaust fans in kitchen, laundry and bath. A $22 humidistat turns them on automatically when humidity rises.

2. Vent the clothes dryer directly to the outdoors. A $10 kit fits most of the more recent models of dryers. Some dryers use cold water to condense the steam, then flush it down the drain connection to the sewer or septic tank.

3. Waterproof the basement walls to keep moisture vapors from coming through them unseen, soaking the air. Or install a humidistat-controlled portable dehumidifier to keep the air dry (16 of these little machines are shown and described in pages 166 and 169.)

4. Seal off crawl spaces to prevent moisture from coming up from the bare soil; cover the soil with a moisture barrier of metal foil, plastic or roofing paper, overlapping all joints at least 4 inches.

5. Wherever vapor-barriers were omitted in building the house, or if they have been damaged (any hole in the barrier ruins its usefulness), seal the walls against moisture vapors by using indoors only oil or alkyd paints, never a water-mix type. Oil and alkyd paints, so long as the film is intact, act as vapor barriers to keep moisture in the air from getting into the wall.

6. Install sizable louvered ventilators in the attic.

7. To allow escape of moisture that does get into the wall despite the six precautions above, install ventilating louvers generously in the walls, usually under the eaves, also near the base of the walls.

How to spot sources of leaks

Spotting leaks is not easy, but water that gets behind most paint films is likely to ruin the bond, so hunt for these clues:

1. Stains or tiny blisters fanning out from the bottom corners of the windows. (Is flashing missing or perhaps broken?)

2. Stains below gutters. (Overflowed when ice- or leaf-clogged?)

3. Shingles near gutters humped out of position. (Ice backed up under them during the spring thaws?)

4. Glass in windows loose. (Did putty fall out?)

5. Loose joints in doors. (Did vibration shake parts loose and break paint films?)

6. Mud stains on surface near the ground. (Is splash keeping surfaces wet?)

7. Mildew or moss on areas near the ground. (Is wick-action bringing moisture up from the soil continuously?)

8. Shrubs or tree branches scraping across painted surfaces in storms. (Wore away the paint?)

Don't paint wet wood or masonry

House paints except water-mix types, won't stick if applied to moist surfaces. Rain-wet surfaces need 24 hours of good drying weather—the kind that dries clothes on the line. Wood wet by dew needs an hour of drying after the dew disappears. Wood that can't dry out thoroughly, because fresh plaster indoors is still drying out, isn't ready for exterior painting until the plaster is dry—which often takes 2 or 3 months.

New masonry must have time to cure properly, and curing often involves adding water. Delay the exterior painting until the curing is completed and the excess moisture has dried out. This 3- to 6-months' wait applies even if you plan to use a water-mix paint.

"Blister-proof" paint is for "new" wood

In cold-winter areas, where moisture blisters are common, you can buy special zinc-free opaque paints for use on new wood, or where old paint was removed down to bare wood. But these paints have no special value once the wood has been painted with a primer containing zinc. In the latter event, or if the type of the old paint is unknown, it is well to avoid an alkyd type of finish coat when repainting in a blister-prone region. The combination of alkyd over zinc sometimes makes the paint film more likely to blister and peel.

In all areas, blistering will plague you less if you avoid a build-up of the paint film. Don't paint too often: Apply not more than one coat every 3 or 4 years or a 2-coat job every 5 or 6 years.

int. This often happens in trying to brush the paint into an even surface. Making a can of paint cover far more territory than it should is to shorten the film life.

Wait for good painting weather, and for thorough drying between coats of paint when doing a two-coat job. The surface must be dry—not just on the outside but on the inside; it is not enough that it looks dry. Wait at least 24 hours after a rain—48 to 72 hours if humid weather—and preferably 2 to 3 days between coats.

Moisture isn't the only weather problem, of course. Paint may not dry properly if the temperature is too low any time of the day or night during the first three days. Check the label for the minimum safe temperature; 50° F. is a common recommendation, although some latex house paints are made for application at temperatures as low as 42° F. Don't risk failure; it's better to let a fall-completed house go through the winter bare. If you can't get three good days to get on the prime coat—or to patch to one coat of a colorless penetrating (not a surface-sealing type) natural finish to keep the paint from raising until you are able to switch back to the opaque type of exterior paint in the spring.

5. Work in the shade. Paints are not made to go on hot surfaces. Keep four hours ahead of the sun and you will avoid heat blisters and the "flash" drying that leads to alternate dull and shiny spotting on the surfaces.

6. Don't expect the impossible. No paint lasts forever. The best quality gloss house paint must be renewed every 5 to 6 years (self-cleaning white type) or every 6 to 8 years (deep-tone colors). Both types really should be re-applied about a year sooner for best appearance. Flat house paint lacks the protection of a glossy surface, so must be re-applied every 4 years.

House paint of the oil and alkyd type lasts best when applied initially so that two coats (primer plus finish coat) makes a paint film about 5-mil thick (5/1000 of an inch or about the thickness of a dollar bill). Normal weathering wears this film away at the rate of 1/8 to 1 mil per year, depending upon the type of paint involved. If you wait each time until the top coat weathers away, you can repaint indefinitely without increasing the film thickness beyond the 5 to 6 mil "ideal." But paint gets dirty before the top coat is completely gone, and people often want to change the color long before the 6- to 8-year life of the film of a "non-fading" bright color, so paint films do gradually thicken over the years.

Thick films behave peculiarly. If kept wet day after day, they may puff up into the big, round blisters (page 124). This usually happens first in areas that received an extra coat of paint at some time in the past.

Sometimes a thick film clings to a wall until one final repainting adds the last straw of weight that causes the film to fall off in spots.

Obviously anything that you do to avoid a build-up of film thickness postpones the day of reckoning (some houses have kept their just-new look for a hundred years). Easiest is to delay repainting until the present top coat has had time to weather.

If the house looks dirty, maybe washing it (laundry detergent in water) is more in order than painting. Or maybe one side of the house is in good enough condition to skip painting it this time. Often the north side weathers much more slowly than the other sides, because of the lack of sunheat beating down on it. Or possibly just the south side needs painting at this time. So far, few people have been willing to paint their houses in stages like this, but it is a way of postponing, possibly indefinitely, the need to burn and scrape off a paint film now nearing a dangerous thickness from over-zealous painting in the past.

Natural finishes follow different rules

Natural finishes are of two types: those that penetrate into the wood and those that sit on the surface. Both types slow down the rate of alternate wetting and drying that causes unprotected lumber to warp and cup, pulling loose the nails. But neither stops wetting, nor do they prevent the normal changes in texture and color that follow weathering. The color changes can be obliterated however, by the careful choice of a masking color in a natural finish.

Application is so easy that the (Please turn the page) homeowner often starts with natural finish type without planning what he may want to do, if he isn't happy with the weathered effect. Or he may tire of the frequent need for reapplying the surface-sealing type of natural finish, which sits so exposed to the sun and the rain. Remember: You can't switch to any other type of paint, until you remove the surface sealing type 100 per cent.

Surface-sealers usually begin to look shabby in 9 to 18 months. Because they don't weather evenly and can't be "touched up," they soon build up into a thick layer that cracks and peels. You really should remove a surface-sealer and start fresh each time, but this is such a job.

Penetrating natural finishes (sometimes, unfortunately, called "sealers") sink into the wood where the sun and the rain have little effect on them. The principal reason for repainting is to freshen faded colors—and this can be done by touching up only the faded areas. General reuse once every 3 to 5 years gives ample protection to the wood, although no great harm occurs if used much less often, especially for the natural weather-resistant woods that are most adapted to natural finishes.

"Bleaching" creosote oils, for example, need be used only once.

YOU CAN use opaque oil and alkylid house paints over any of the penetrating types of natural finish, except fresh creosote, which may continue to "bleed" through for a year or more, but is usually no trouble after a 6-month wait, unless you want to use a white house paint over it. Old-style black creosote, which shouldn't be used anyhow, can never be painted over successfully.

Caution: Old wooden shingles which have never been painted in any way, may warp and cup when painted. Even a light coat of penetrating natural finish may add enough moisture-resistance to the painted side of the shingle to cause it to warp. Sometimes the warping and cupping are severe enough to wrench shingles off the roof or sidewalls, even though the nailing was strong enough to stand up to the worst that past hurricanes could do. (New shingles should be dipped to coat both sides with paint, just as new lumber is "back primed" to prevent giving uneven water protection.)

Masonry is a law unto itself

Water vapor slips through thick concrete or brick with no more effort than if they were wood. If trapped behind a vapor-tight paint film, the accumulating water exerts pressure that often builds up enough to push the paint off.

Oil and alkyd house paints also sometimes fail on masonry surfaces for another reason: The free alkali commonly found in new masonry combines with the oils in these paints to form a greasy, slippery soap—and that's the end of good bonding for the paint. It's good practice to wash all new masonry stains with a zinc sulfate solution. Failure sometimes takes the form of dramatic shredding of the whole paint film.

Special oil and alkyd paints are available for masonry, but most paint manufacturers have turned to one or more of five other kinds of masonry paint:

1. Solvent-type rubber base (rubber or rubber resin dissolved in special solvents).
2. Water-mix rubber base (rubber or rubber resin suspended in water-mix).
3. Cement paint (a water-mix of cement and pigment).
4. Specialty coatings (super-tough new chemicals becoming popular in industry to resist acids and physical abuse).

5. Silicone water repellents (colorless, penetrating natural finish).

All five types shed rain water. The water-mix types of rubber-base paints and the silicone water repellents also allow water vapor to escape through them. The solvent type rubber-base paints and the specialty coatings do not, but they are so made that they bond to the masonry so tightly that trapped moisture can't break the bond. Cement paints may or may not allow vapor to escape, depending upon how they are mixed and applied. Many are part of a water-proofing system.

The silicone water repellents are the easiest to apply, but they add no color. PVA, latex and acrylic paints are almost as easy to use, and they are very much in the news at the moment. But the oldest test paintings into these water-mix rubber paints are only six years old. These paint jobs still look fine. A few have been repainted within the year to freshen up the coloring. No problems arose, so apparently PVA can be used over PVA, latex over latex, acrylic over acrylic. Sad experience, though, has shown that none of the three can be applied over any other type of paint without risk of promptly peeling off in big sheets. To be safe, confine the water-mix rubbers to new masonry, or to old masonry which has been sand-blasted clean. But many people will decide to take a chance, especially over old cement paint. For such people some of the PVA-makers offer a special primer, a "surface conditioner" or anchor coat, which penetrates and rebonds the old cement paint to the masonry below.

PVA, latex and acrylic form a paint film by drying rather than curing, as in oil and alkyd paints; the three water-mix rubber paints form a thin sheet of rubber when the water evaporates and the tiny particles of rubber close together. Obviously you shouldn't apply PVA, latex or acrylic paints to a wall that stays damp. Nor can you expect much luck with a water-mix applied in weather too chilly for prompt drying. Check the label for the lowest safe temperature. Rains can't re-emulsify the rubber once it is in sheet form, but rains can waterspot the film a bit, although not noticeably so in the best quality water-mixes, especially those of the acrylic type.

Rubber bases have brightest colors

The water-mix rubbers and the cement paints come only in light colors, although deep-tone colors in the rubbers appear likely. Solvent type rubber-base house paints not only offer brightness, but gloss. The specialty coatings are bright, but they are too expensive at the present time for big areas in home masonry painting.

Metals

The area of metal to paint has jumped enormously in today's house. All of it must first be primed carefully with a special metal primer. The usual prime coat used for wood is not satisfactory. The finish coat on metal can be any of the opaque finishes, although PVA, latex and acrylic are risky because their water content can lead to quick rusting, especially if there happen to be any breaks in the prime coat.

To be sure primer bonds well to entire metal surface, clean away all rust, also any greases (often not visible to the eye: scrub the metal with Ajax to be safe).

Each of the specialty coatings—vinyl, epoxy, neoprene and polyester—requires its own special primer. Without these, permanent bonding is unlikely. Used correctly, a 15- to 20-year life seems reasonable from test results.

and all the obvious eating places for travelers.

You have traversed a thousand, two thousand, three thousand miles! You are sitting perhaps in the heart of a tropical paradise. On a ride through the countryside you have seen strange tropical fruits. You have walked through the markets and seen baskets piled high with curious and wondrous unknown vegetables. Now you are back for lunch in your luxury hotel. And what do you find? On the menu is written, "This hotel is noted for its continental cuisine." You know you are in for it—a poor imitation of third-, fourth- or fifth-rate so-called French cooking, prepared by a chef who has long since forgotten almost everything he learned in a Swiss hotel school 20 years ago.

But far from being ashamed of their ignorance of the local gastronomy, the hotel-keeper boasts of it. You should have seen the way the eyebrows of the Maitre d'Hotel at one of the famous French restaurants in Mexico practically disappeared into his hair-line when we asked for the white fish of Patzcuaro instead of a pseudo Thermidor of Lobster which he proudly told us had been flown down from Maine. Equally horrified was the head-waiter at Del Prado when we wanted to order the celebrated goat cheese of Oaxaca and a bottle of Mexican rosa wine.

"Mesdames," he informed us with the loftiest lift of the chin, "we serve here only imported cheese and wine. Frankly, I have never heard of the others."

NOT ONLY abroad but all over the United States you'll find this same disdain. Even in San Francisco, famed for the fabulous sand dab which most gourmets agree puts Dover sole to shame, we were served, with tremendous ceremony and at enormous cost, Filet of Sole Marguery—everything imported, of course, and so poor that one of our party renamed it, for obvious reasons, "Floundered Soul."

Where in Boston, except at Durgin's Park, can you find Boston baked beans and brown bread?

Did you ever go looking for spoon bread in a public eating place down South? How often have you seen wall-eyed pike—one of the world's most glorious fish—on a Michigan menu?

The irony of it all is that restaurants can be a fine passport to a new world in gastronomy. But they can also be a barrier. You have to be smart about how to get past the barriers, how to find the restaurants that do introduce you to the new-to-you, the local, the indigenous.

Of course this kind of snobbery about the imported can be found in homes, too. We don't mind an admiration about French cooking or some of the other great cuisines of the world, but we don't believe it should rule out an admiration for the best that can be produced at home. For it's the French who are the world's leading experts at recognizing food for exactly what it is and thus seeing how best to use it. They have what Gertrude Stein called "pure vision," an ability to see the thing itself. This pure vision is very necessary to cooking. It lets you know whether to serve the strawberries whole with the stems on, or whether you'd do better to stem, slice and let them repose under a film of sugar for 15 minutes so they'll become juicier.

The French would not be so blind as to buy caviar at $32 per Russian pound and miss the wonders of other equally good roes, such as the mealy gold of poached mullet eggs bought for 30 cents a pound in a Harlem market. The French would have them both, because they see food straight and pure without any preconceptions—paying no attention to prices, "imports" or anything but whether it tastes good. Once you can see the same way, you can widen your world miraculously.

One of the pleasures of cooking is being able to increase your skill. To fry or boil an egg so the white is not leathery requires sensitive understanding, a paying-of-attention to the small signals of change that tell you when to turn up the heat or turn it down. Such skill takes a seeing eye, and an understanding mind.

If you know how much fat to cut off the steak before you broil it, if you know when to wash strawberries, if you know the exact instant to turn a pancake so that it is neither dry nor soggy, you are operating with skill—an informed skill.

The act of successfully doing what you want to do is a pleasure. This is the pleasure that is derived whenever the mind illumines any action. It is fun to perfect a technique, to become better and better at something, to analyze why a thing contributes to flavor or texture or efficiency, or speed. It is a pleasure to think about the alternatives open to you—whether to soak the lamb in wine or soy sauce, or whether to use ginger or garlic. If you have no knowledge of either, nor any experience with either, you can only stumble along, trusting to fool's luck, hoping that the person who wrote the recipe you are following blindly had more of a cultural background and is leading you to a finished dish that has more than mere adequacy.

COOKING approached in this thoughtful way is not work or drudgery, for you're always testing a theory, pursuing a point of view, synthesizing a principle which you can reapply in some other circumstance. You are creating as you cook when your mind can be at play on these matters.

Add to this matter of skills the big crucial one about nutritional understanding and you get a fourth dimension. If you know about nutrition—really know, instead of faddish calorie counting—you'll know why you must not soak the raw vegetables to crisp them, and why it is better to eat an orange in the hand than to squeeze it. You'll know why and when to limit the amount of roughage in your diet, when to avoid whole wheat flours and celery.

The devotees of food as culture are a merry company. You find them everywhere. Some are rich—even after taxes. Some are pension-poor. Many live in cities, but some in little towns, farms and ranches. A few are young. Many are older, for the gourmet attitude seems to increase with the mellowing effect of years—which is another way to say "experience." Perhaps one generalization may be permitted: Usually they are the nicest people, the most interesting; in some cases the most successful. This type of culture seems to thrive among warm-hearted, kindly folk. This makes it all the more fun to be one of them.

As for their haunts, you may find them in restaurants, grocery stores, super-markets and open-air markets. A decade ago they gathered in the old Fortnum & Mason's in London. Now it's Hediard's in Paris. Charles, the Vendome and the newly-reopened Maison Glass in New York, as well as Washington Market and the stalls under the tracks at Park Avenue and 116th Street; where you can buy eddoes, gineps and plantains and even annatto from the West Indies. You find them at the Farmers Market too, and at Balzer's in Los Angeles, or while prowling among the delicacies at Marshall Field's or at Stop and Shop in Chicago. You'll find them too, in the small inconspicuous shops like TelBurn on East 55th Street, in New York, which the untutored eye might pass by with never a second look. But, here in a single afternoon you may meet a famous portrait painter, a TV star, an agency vice-president, an engineer lately returned from the Far East, a diplomat, and a dishwasher from a Chinese restaurant. Some come for rare spices, some for teas. Many are curry fanciers and they find here at least 41 types of custom-blended curry powders.

But no matter where you find them, there will be that thrill of recognition which comes when you meet a kindred soul.

But there are other thrills of recognition—not involving people. You'll feel inordinately proud when you recognize in a strange land an old, old friend. To meet aioili in Provence, and to be able to say to yourself, "Why, of course, I know you. I know your family—originally from Greece, though most people don't know that. You're really a mayonnaise, with lots of garlic, made green with finely minced herbs. Most people think your family started in the French city of Mayen, but I know better."

Then out of deference to your new friend, you make an aioili in your own manner when you get home, tossed together in seconds in your blender, to which you add two plump cloves of garlic put through your little press and colored (if you don't grow your own herbs) with a couple of drops of green coloring. And as you make your modernized version you think long thoughts about your trip, and you wonder where the Greeks got the recipe, and how you'd better read up on what civilizations colonized the Greeks, so you can figure out who really concocted "mayennaise" first.

Thus "the modern epicure" illumines every action taken in food procurement and preparation with some kind of understanding.

You may be asking yourself, "But what is the down-to-earth, tangible pay-off of making cooking a culture area?"

Here are seven pay-offs, as real as you could ask for.

1. Once cooking becomes more than reading and blindly following somebody else's recipe, you begin to cook superbly well. For, let's face it, many, many recipes are not superb because they are created by people who may not have their own cooking practices sharpened by years of tasting the best. You, though, begin to view a recipe as something you can improve on. You look for the fallacies in method or the lacks in seasoning and you correct as you go along—sometimes almost unconsciously. This is what the "born cook" does (and you can tell we don't think there is such a thing).

2. This approach to cooking lets you break through the status quo in recipes and create new methods, new combinations, new short-cuts. We have hardly begun to absorb the huge gains made in the last 20 years, and the huge mass of recipes are obsolete in the light of the revolutionary meaning of new appliances and new industrial foodstuffs.

3. You can order a meal superbly well in a restaurant, for you know how to run your eye down the menu and judge the sophistication and capabilities of the chef, so you can summon up the best he is capable of.

4. You can buy the best foodstuffs available for your own kitchen, screening from a huge variety of sources the choicest. You tap the local, national and international sources in a way you would not have known before.

5. You get a better focus on price, for you know when to pay extra to get something better, and when not to pay more because there is a false value buried in the price. For instance, peak-of-the-season plenitude is also the time of peak flavor and lowest prices. Out-of-season means lowest flavor and highest prices. The gourmet eats in season.

6. The cultured cook knows when to cook quick and when to cook long, and adapts the menu and the recipe to the time available. Just as there are certain types of music written to be played as encores, so there are certain types of dishes for fast concocting.

7. The cultured cook commits no clichés, such as the ever-present buffet menu of baked ham, potatoes au gratin and green salad. The cultured cook never deludes herself into thinking she can achieve individuality for a party by calling in the best or highest priced caterer in the city. (As one wedding-weary guest remarked, "You can almost taste the rubber stamp.")

Spiced Iced Tea

This is by way of a thank you note to Twin Trees Gardens in Lynbrook, New York, for their new "Frosty" tea with Lemon Verbena, a special blend of Ceylon and Darjeeling, rather surprisingly and enticingly flavored with the herb. If by good chance you should have a lemon verbena plant in your garden, it's a lovely idea to garnish the tea as you would a mint julep so that the sprigs will please the nose.

Another enchanting tea for icing is the widely distributed Bigelow's Constant Comment mixed with the finely cut rind of oranges and a variety of sweet spices in the Early American fashion.

A Bow to Bonté

A picture of the Arc de Triomphe decorates the ruby foil-covered tin of peas put up by the Green Giant Company of Le Sueur, Minnesota. These, if we may be permitted a slight touch of chauvinism, are American peas—very young, very early, very June—that put French canned petit pois far in the shade. Perhaps if you are lucky enough to have eaten in French homes, you have tasted their counterpart—cooked with tiny onions and flavored with a bit of lettuce and the most delicate of seasonings.

Exit Butter Bother

Melting a bit of butter needed for the batter of popovers, pancakes, and such-like is always a chore. You have to find that little pipkin. It's so small it tips. The handle gets hot. You burn your fingers. Of course, you can use salad oil instead, but it doesn't give quite the same taste.

Haste proved to be the mother of inspiration. One morning we tossed the butter along with the flour, milk and eggs into the electric blender and away it whirled. Couldn't be better!

New Blades for Old

If your trusty Waring is more than a couple of years old, it's probably not as wondrous as the new ones. But did you know you can make it so with a change of blades and at a cost of about three dollars? Several top-flight manufacturers of small appliances, including Waring Products Corporation, have combined to authorize a number of small appliance service centers in cities and towns all over the United States. Factory Approved Service Stations are generally listed as such in the phone book, but if you are unable to locate one in your locality, you may write for information to Waring Products

Service Center, Winsted, Conn. A joy and an amazement what this new super-efficient cutting blade will do—grind coffee, chop vegetables and even nuts.

Snow in Summer

Such a furor when on a warm afternoon we served Pimm's Cup, "the original gin sling," in snow-crusted glass tankards. Wonder of wonders, even in the heat of the sun, the glasses kept their icy frost.

with Make-It-Snow, from a spray tin. Yes, the kind you use at Christmas! Harmless, it brushes or washes off easily—not a substitute but as an adjunct to a well-chilled glass, it works particularly well on a handled mug like Plummer's graceful gin-and-tonics, which everybody uses for everything just as they use Pimm's 12-ounce tankards. Pimm's pretty and useful glasses are not available in stores, but may be ordered directly from Julius Wile & Co., Dept. HB, Teterboro, N.J. Only $3 for four tankards.

Pimm's of England

Naturally when you have the tankards, or even while you are waiting for them, your thoughts will turn nostalgically to the herbal fruitiness of Pimm's Cup. Easiest of mixed drinks to make—no more trouble than a highball! Simply pour over ice cubes a jigger (1½ oz.) of Pimm's Cup No. 1 which you buy at any liquor store. Fill the glass with 7-Up, Tom Collins Mix, ginger ale, ginger beer or newest-of-the-new lemony White Rock Vodka Mixer or Canada Dry Vodka Splash. Garnish with a slice or small section of lemon or lime and a long strip of unpeeled cucumber, or a sprig of borage.

A Dark Mysterious Dip

Down Dallas way there is a sizable segment of the population beginning to be known as the Benell Beit—devotees of Julie Benell of the Dallas Morning News and WFAA-TV. Her book of Favorite Recipes, published by Hanover House, Garden City, N.Y. ($2.95), only a couple of months ago, is already in its third printing. From it we learned the secret of a curiously interesting cocktail dip that, we predict, may rival the ubiquitous Lipton's onion soup and sour cream concoction. This one starts with a can of Campbell's condensed black bean soup thoroughly blended with two 3-ounce packages of cream cheese. Season Texas style (this means hot) with 3 or 4 drops of Tabasco, one teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce, ½ teaspoon powdered thyme, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon powdered garlic or one clove of garlic. Serve with potato chips, Fritos, Devonshire Melba Rounds or most interestingly with the thin bread sticks of Turin.

Green Corn Cakes

Many years ago in Athens, Alabama, we tasted these tender little cakes which bear not even the slightest resemblance to stolid corn fritters. These are guiltless of flour and baking powder. The classicist would say that they can never be properly made except from the milkiest of kernels scraped as of that minute, from the tenderest of roasting ears. We would have agreed until we found Dulany's frozen creamed corn from Fruitland in Maryland. Every time, any day in the year, this corn has only to be thawed and it is perfect for cakes or green corn pudding. Irma Rombauer says, "The corn is right if it looks like thick curdled cream when scraped." and in the Joy of Cooking, Mrs. Rombauer shows various scrapers. Now no more scraping, simply thaw one package of frozen creamed corn, add three well-beaten egg yolks, ½ teaspoon salt and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the three eggs. Drop by spoonfuls onto a hot, well-greased griddle: brown on one side and then on the other.

These are touch-me-not cakes much too delicate to handle. Traditionally, they call for turkey hash or else molasses or maple syrup or honey. Serves six.

Life Can Be Simple

At our house that ever-vexing problem of what to serve with a drink is no more. On the shelf along with the mixings, stand three Cresca jars. Interesting nibbles all. First there is the Cocktail Melange, which I first discovered being put together in a gracious country house in Ipswich, involving package after package of Cheerios, Wheatchex, Ricechex, pretzels and mixed nuts. Like the homemade original, the Cresca Melange is toasted in oil and tastily seasoned. The second Cresca jar holds crisp waffled pillows, thumbnail size, flavored with fine herbs. You taste basil, chervil, chives, parsley. A third jar holds Salamees—related not to Salomé but salami. These are small cocktail diamonds, tasting quite definitely like a good Bavarian schlagwurst. Cresca products, by the way, are everywhere these days—in food specialty shops and also in many super markets.

Instant Café Espresso

Suddenly, for what seems to be no reason whatsoever, you may find yourself remembering Venice in the summertime and the tables at Florian's Café on the square in front of San Marco. All because of a little cup of café espresso which turns out to be instant coffee. No macchinetta, no steam, no trouble! One of a trio of international instant put up by Jina Food Originals, Dept. H, P.O. Box 53, Midwood Sta., Brooklyn 3, N.Y. There is also instant Café Français "enriched with pure chicory after an authentic West Indian recipe," and a Viennese Coco-Café prepared with cocoa beans to be served hot or cold, topped in either case with schlagsahne (sweetened whipped cream) accompanied, of course, by Mozart or a Strauss waltz.

These coffees are available only by mail in sets of three ($2.95 ppd. East of Mississippi).

WALLPAPER COUNCIL

scrolls. Here is a case where you may want to make a simple composition of three or four butterflies and some foliage or a bird with reeds and grasses against a white background, and finish it off in a narrow red or black lacquer frame.

A very different effect may be achieved by using museum treasures as source-material for murals. Attracted by a Central African cave dwelling in the exhibition albums of the Museum of Modern Art Library, a friend of ours had the museum's photo service print a 3½' x 8' enlargement for the wall above his living room sofa. And a well-known designer of furniture had the museum enlarge a Picasso line drawing as the focal point for his studio wall.

In a child's room a photomural of blocks and toys or one of cookie molds might be your choice. One little boy of our acquaintance has a Lollipop Corner—a mural of a huge lollipop tree, which a picture in a magazine last December inspired his parents to make for him, instead of the more conventional Christmas tree. (Whenever he is especially good, by some miracle the tree sheds real lollipops, which he finds beneath it the next morning.) Another youngster has a photomural of a doll's house above the long low shelf on which she keeps her dolls.

The kitchen is often a rather pictorially neglected part of a home. With a little thought and a photomural treatment, this too can easily be remedied. You might want to test the possibilities of close-ups of garden vegetables, an arrangement of utensils, a still-life to rival the best of Braque.

Another ideal place for a mural is right over the bar—perhaps an interesting composition of bottles or a sidewalk café scene or the huge casks and copper still of the Benedictine Monastery in Fécamp.

Of all the walls in your home, however, those of the study hold the greatest potential for photomural decoration. Perhaps that is because a study so often reflects the interests and hobbies of its occupant, and a photomural can be a most dramatic background against which to display the objects of those hobbies.

Glass showcases of rare coins could be handsomely exhibited against a sepia enlargement of an architectural fragment from antiquity, photographed in high key. Or the coins might be applied directly to the mural before glass and frame are added. A collection of shells is given greater decorative importance when shown against a mural of Waikiki Beach; shelves of geological specimens look very much at home set against a photomural of the Grand Canyon.

Displaying miniature animal sculpture against a Henri Rousseau forest scene or Venetian glass against a view of the Grand Canal; using a montage of album covers for the wall behind the record player; applying dried and pressed botanical specimens to an Adirondack scene in all its summer glory; lining large shadow-boxes with suitable murals to add depth and authentic background to the objects highlighted—these are some of the ways people have let their hobby of photography help show off their other hobbies.

The general procedure for getting your photomural material is as follows:

At the Museum of Modern Art

Go to the Photographic Service in the Museum's Library. There, any photo on which the Museum holds the negative rights may be selected for enlargement, provided it is for home use and is not to be used commercially in any way. (The Museum arranges with an outside studio service to do the actual enlarging.) Approximate rates for unmounted 40" x 8"—$40; 24" x 48"—$12.

At the Metropolitan Museum of Art

The Photo Sales Department provides a negative, plus one print, of anything on exhibition, e.g., a painting or tapestry in 8" x 10" size for $15. The largest size that the Museum provides is 40" x 48" for $35. Then you take the negative for enlargement to a professional studio service (they will recommend several names) or make it in your own darkroom.

Other Museums

Follow same procedure as Metropolitan. If they do not have Photo Sales Departments they will generally give their permission to have anything in their own collections photographed, so long as it is not to be used commercially.

Costs for enlarging run about like this:

$1-$1.25 per sq. ft., unmounted black-and-white.

$2 per sq. ft., unmounted sepia.

50¢-75¢ extra per sq. ft., mounted.

$3-$4 per sq. ft., if applied directly to wall (unmounted) by a professional. (E.g.: 40" x 8' would cost $40 unmounted, $60 mounted, or about $100 professionally installed directly on the wall.)

Fruit for dessert

By SYBILLE BEDFORD and EVELYN GENDEL

Nothing else satisfies the two cravings—for sweets and for refreshment—like fresh fruit.

There's hardly any cooking. Sometimes just an unexpected combination—purple plums, almonds and honey; or melon and raspberries, half-frozen into a coarse cream; perhaps nothing more complex than peaches and bananas, but with tart red currant to bring out the sweetness. Melon, stewed in pun-sugar, or scented with strawberries. And strawberries—scattered over sliced blood-oranges, or spooned icy-cold over whipped-cream cornucopias.

For grande luxe, a mousse of picrots and whipped cream. Or a whole ripe fresh pineapple stuffed with fruit, bathed in champagne and chilled to the core.

Make a shimmering jelly of oranges; give peaches a crushed-raspberry frosting. And for every day, make the best stewed fruit anyone ever ate—peaches or those small blue Italian prune-plums, served in their own thick pure juice (not sugar syrup), chilled, with sour cream, or with layer cake, or on top of ice-cream, or just by themselves. They're so incredibly good the family eats them round the clock. For a part, try these:

Plums and Almonds, Maison

Get some nice big pe plums, purple or yellow. Peel off skins and halve them. Fit a whole white peeled almond into every half-plum, cover with a little honey, and mask with ice-cold sour cream. (Use fresh almonds when they are in season.)

A Half-Freeze of Melon and Raspberries

Halve and clean some small melons and fill each half with some frozen crushed raspberries and cream. Or just mash some ripe raspberries with a fork, mix them with sugar and some heavy cream, put them in a tray and let them freeze coarsely. (A half cup of cream and five tablespoons of sugar for every half pound of raspberries.) Shortly before serving, fill your already chilled melon halves. This is refreshing and very good with or without sugar wafers.

Peaches, Bananas and Almonds in Red Currant Dressing

This is a delightfully sweet-tart combination. Mash some fresh red currants with a fork (or rub them through a sieve or put them in an electric blender) and sweeten them with plenty of confectioners' sugar to taste. Do this ahead of time, put them in a cup in the refrigerator and let them remain until very cold.

Before dinner, take some frozen peaches, just thawed, an equal quantity of sliced banana. (Please turn the page)

FRUIT FOR DESSERT

bananas, and a few peeled almonds, whole or halved, and turn them into a pretty bowl and mix or mask them with the sweetened, mashed red currants. Decorate with a few whole almonds.

The tart red currants combine most agreeably with the sweetness of the bananas and the freshness of the peaches, but be sure to put the fruit together just before dinner. If the peaches are still a bit icy, so much the better. By dessert-time, they should be still deliciously cool and fresh—just right. Beware long-thawed, limp, warm peaches!

Stewed Melon

This is delicious, cool and pretty—everything one wants in a summer dessert. Perfect by itself for luncheon. For a party, dress it up with an angel cake.

Cook some chunks of ripe, peeled melon with some spun sugar in a little orange and lemon juice until they are just done. (Literally, only a minute or two, gently boiling; above all, not mushy.) Cool, chill, and serve in a crystal bowl.

To make spun sugar: put some sugar in a small saucepan, add just enough cold water to melt it, and let it come to a rapid boil. Every so often dip a stick or a small wooden spoon into the boiling sugar, and then plunge the stick immediately into a ready bowl of cold water. At first the sugar left on the stick will be a kind of soft thread; a minute later the thread will be stronger; at the next test it will be a soft film, then in only a few seconds the film will become brittle and break clean. (Thermometer should read 350 degrees.)

Now the spun sugar is ready, take it off the fire at once (or it next becomes caramel). Use it hot, or break off a cold piece to cook with your melon.

Melon Stuffed with Wild Strawberries

This is another delicious melon dessert—best with those small, incomparably scented wild berries.

Select a fine ripe cantaloupe, not too large. Open it by cutting out a small circular piece at the stalk end. Reserve that piece; it will serve as a lid or bung later. Scrape the seeds out with a long-handled spoon. Now with the same spoon, loosen the flesh of the melon without piercing the rind, and leave the chunks of flesh inside the melon. Put in a spoonful of powdered sugar, then fill up the melon with whole ripe wild strawberries, add some more sugar, shake the melon a little, refit the lid in the opening and seal it with a little butter. Now put the melon in a cold part of the refrigerator for the rest of the day.

When you open the melon—you may widen the opening a little for easier serving—the whole house will be perfumed with the fragrance of wild strawberries.

It's customary to macerate this kind of dessert in a liqueur or wine. Try to refrain for once, and see what wild strawberries can do for you unadorned.

(You don't need a wild strawberry patch to enjoy the above recipe. Instead buy plants of Fraises des bois, the runnerless strawberry of France. They'll produce tiny, tasty, dark red berries in July and August. The plants are compact as an ornamental groundcover.)

Oranges aux Fraises des Bois

This is one of the most gracious, simple things we know—orange slices scattered with strawberries.

Cut the skin, and the white inner coating, too, from a large sweet blood orange with a sharp knife (hold it by inserting a small, sharp-pronged fork), then slice it down into thin round slices, across the grain. Arrange the slices on a large dish, or on individual fruit plates, scatter a spoonful of fresh wood-strawberries on top, sugar well, and serve at once. The fruit should be cool, not iced. Count about one orange per person.

Fraises à l'Andalouse

This is a real classic dish—elegant, very rich, and delicious.

Put some sugar and a little Sherry over some fresh whole strawberries and let them chill in the refrigerator for a couple of hours or so. At serving time, cover them with some ice-cold whipped cream seasoned with (1) a few mashed strawberries, and (2) some finely grated orange peel. Decorate with a few large berries.

Note: When sugaring berries, leave them at room temperature long enough for the sugar to dissolve (turn them lightly, without crushing) before putting them on ice. Otherwise the sugar just makes an icy coating which won't penetrate and sweeten.

Frozen strawberries make luscious desserts. Try a homemade ice cream, made with heavy, stiff-whipped cream mixed with thawed, frozen strawberries (nothing else). Freeze it in trays in the ice compartment. And don't serve it rock-hard. Take it out to soften a bit before serving. Best ice cream you ever tasted.

And for a wonderful dessert that's—literally—no work, and grand enough for a dinner party, buy some light, flaky-sweet, cornucopia-shaped pastries filled with whipped cream. Have them ready on individual dessert plates; at dessert-time spoon over them some just-thawed frozen strawberries.

Apricot Mousse

For a formal occasion, when you want to cut a figure, this is a most luxuriously rich mousse. It requires little preliminary work, but the result is quite heavenly.

Rub a pound of very ripe peeled apricots through a sieve, mix them with  $\frac{1}{4}$  pound of confectioners' sugar and  $\frac{1}{2}$  pint of whipped cream. Turn it into a dessert dish, and serve ice-cold but not quite frozen. If you wish, you can decorate it with whole fresh berries and/or small macaroons.

Pineapple Pallavicini

This is another elegant dessert.

Take a handsome, whole ripe fresh pineapple and cut off the top just under the spiky leaves. Scoop out the flesh without hurting the shell. Cut the pineapple flesh into small chunks, mix it with some whole ripe garden strawberries and some peeled orange sections, add powdered sugar (turn the fruit gently for a moment to dissolve the sugar) and return all this fruit to the pineapple shell. Moisten with some champagne, cover the opening, put in the refrigerator and chill to the core.

What to do with the rest of the champagne? Well, put some nice Brut New York State or French champagne on ice. Then just before dinner, open your bottle—be it split, pint or quart—give some to the pineapple, and have the rest yourselves. You will discover there is no better aperitif.

Gelée d'Orange à la Moscovite

This is less grand than Pineapple Pallavicini but extremely refreshing—shimmering, clear, and really tasting of oranges.

Mix the juice of 12 large blood oranges with the juice of a lemon. Add the thin rind (no white) of a few of the oranges (as many as you have patience to do), and allow to infuse for half an hour. Add sugar to taste and about two ounces of melted (unflavored) gelatin. Strain (to get rid of the orange rinds), cool, then chill. The jelly should be thick but not entirely set and stiff. Serve ice cold.

Jenny's Stewed Peaches

Take two pounds of medium-size peaches (two pounds lasts a small family two or three days), peel them, remove the stones. Put them in a medium saucepan, throw in a few of the stones for flavor, add a quarter of a cup of water, and place over brisk heat, covered. Turn them gently after a while, top to bottom. In anything from five to ten minutes over the same brisk heat, they will have made quantities of foaming juice—they'll be just about covered with it. From then on keep the heat moderate, keep the peaches covered; stop when they are tender (10-20 minutes), but still whole. Don't cook them to rags. A minute before you think they're done, sugar them. Two pounds of peaches take about four or five heaping tablespoons of granulated sugar (but of course it depends on taste). Scatter it into the boiling fruit, give it another moment to dissolve, and the peaches are done. Take them off at once, and turn them into glass jars or china or plastic bowls (NEVER into metal), cover tightly, cool; keep in the icebox, eat them cold.

Note: Remember even quite a lot of sugar tastes only agreeably sweet when chilled, as chilling dulls flavors. (Ice-cream for instance is impossibly sweet melted.) So be generous with sugar.

And DON'T use any lemon; the discolorations will disappear in the cooking.

Jenny's Stewed Plums

Better even than the peaches, this is just the best stewed fruit there is.

Take about two pounds of small oval blue prune-plums, halve them and remove the pits, but don't peel plums. Put them into your saucepan, with a half cup of water this time, and cook them exactly like the peaches. Same brisk heat, covered; turn them occasionally. When they're covered with their own bubbling juices, keep a moderate fire till they're done. Sugar rather more lavishly; the skins give a wonderful tartness that needs a lot of sugar. Don't let them overcook. Keep them covered while cooling (and not in metal), then keep them on ice.

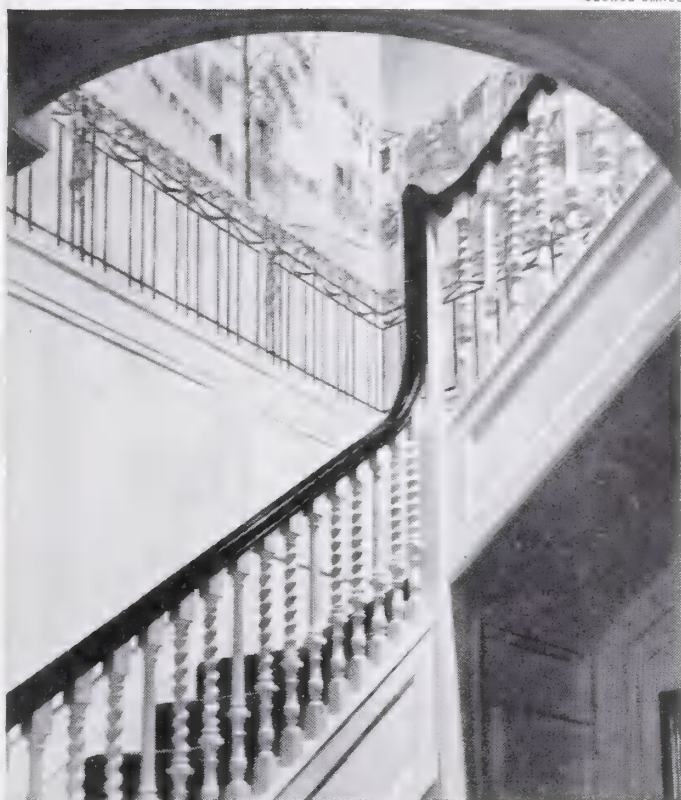

And don't blame us if your family clamors for more!

freezers have taken over the work of making ice cream at home. And they are handsome enough to display with pride on terrace or patio. Women who want their families to enjoy the best have discovered that making his favorite ice cream is an easy way to pamper a husband who is still a little boy when it comes to scraping the dasher.

Clever hostesses know that this good old American custom of making ice cream is one which guests always enjoy. And of course, once you have acquired the taste for homemade ice cream, nothing else will do. You don't have to be a person of discriminating taste to recognize the difference. Most members of the younger generation have never seen an ice cream freezer much less tasted homemade ice cream. Yet, they will tell you that the homemade ice cream is the best.

During a recent week end I was testing several of the new electric freezers along with a variety of ice cream recipes. Word got around to youngsters in the neighborhood and I suddenly had more offers of help than I could possibly use. We had quite an audience as Alice, my ten-year-old daughter, and I prepared the various ice cream mixes. And it seemed to be equally interesting to them to watch Bill, my husky twelve-year-old, feed ice cubes into the electric crusher and pack the freezers layer by layer with rock salt and ice. To a child, ice cream is always a treat, but actually seeing it made was a new and wonderful experience. (Making ice cream is a good family project that can so easily become one of those important traditions which all children enjoy.) The first glimpse of the frozen cream as we opened the freezers was punctuated by oh's and ah's and little squeals of delight. I feel certain they will never forget those "licks" from the dasher. And after sampling generous portions of several flavors, the jury's verdict was unanimous: Homemade ice cream is the very best ever!

First Appearance

To whom the secret of the original "cream ice" was divulged, or who among our early forefathers brought it to this country, no one knows. But it is a matter of record that guests of Martha and George Washington enjoyed this frozen delicacy at Mt. Vernon. When Dolly Madison served ice cream at a White House reception in 1813, it was still a rarity, made by beating the cream by hand and then shaking it up and down in a pan of salt and ice. Not until 1846 when a woman named Nancy Johnson invented a hand-cranked freezer did the making of ice cream become an American tradition which eventually developed and grew into an industry that today produces around 600 million gallons of ice cream a year. Wherever you go in any state of the Union, no matter how small the village, you will find ice cream on the restaurant menu. Unfortunately, it is likely to bear little or no resemblance to homemade ice cream.

MAKING YOUR OWN ICE CREAM

The fact that there are regional preferences as to the basic type of ice cream is not the explanation. What makes the difference? For one thing, it's the butterfat content. Except in their premium ice creams, most manufacturers conform to the minimum standards of the state which may be as high as 14 per cent in several states, but runs as low as 8 per cent in many more. But even this is not the whole story. Ice cream must be aerated during the freezing and as it is being constantly stirred, the volume is increased over that of the mix. This is what is known in the parlance of the industry as the overrun. In some cases, the overrun might be as high as 100 per cent, which would cut the original butterfat content in half, as well as the flavor. In homemade ice cream the overrun is likely to be around 25 per cent, depending on how fast or how slow the cream freezes. Unlike commercial ice cream, the homemade dessert doesn't have to be stored over a long period of time, so the addition of a stabilizer (such as gelatin or vegetable gums) is unnecessary. All this has a bearing on the flavor and goodness of the ice cream. And it explains why you provide your family with the best ice cream, by making it at home, whatever your preference as to basic type or flavor. Even those who are counting calories can enjoy this treat with an easy conscience occasionally, if small portions are served with plenty of whatever fresh fruit may be in season.

Sundays or Sundaes

The homemade variety of sundae made with fresh fruit is always a welcome treat. In the Middle West where ice cream is consumed in large quantities, the story goes that the sundae was born in Evanston, Illinois, which was nicknamed "Heavenston" in the late nineties because the town fathers were such a pious group. They resented the dissipating influence of the soda fountain and passed an ordinance forbidding the sale of ice cream sodas on Sunday. Ingenious fountain operators got around the law by serving ice cream with syrup or fruit, but without soda. The soda-less soda was the Sunday soda and soon became popular for every day of the week. When there was some objection raised to christening the dish after the Sabbath, the spelling was changed to Sundae.

Make Mine Vanilla

While taste preferences vary as to basic type and favorite flavors in different parts of the country, vanilla always leads the parade by a large margin, with chocolate not even a close second and strawberry third. As to the type of ice cream, some prefer the French which uses a rich egg yolk custard that makes a heavier ice cream. The basic American type of ice cream is less rich but is also made of a custard base with or without a thickening of flour or cornstarch. Philadelphia acquired a world-wide reputation for this frozen delicacy made of pure cream, sugar and flavoring with no eggs. With all three you will find that preparing the ice cream mixture the day before it is to be frozen will make for smoother ice cream. The texture of your ice cream will also depend to some extent on the speed with which the mixture freezes. And this is governed to a large degree by the proportions of rock salt and ice.

Packing the Freezer

The ice cream freezer should be packed with ice and rock salt about five minutes before pouring the mixture into the freezer can.

Whether the ice used comes from the trays of your refrigerator or is the commercial variety, it should always be crushed to a size small enough so that the pieces won't jam as the freezer turns. Six measures of ice to one of rock salt gives us the texture we like best, added in layers that start with a generous amount of ice at the bottom. The larger the proportion of rock salt the quicker the results, but your cream is finer-grained when frozen slowly and with the steady speed that the electric freezer provides. If you re-pack the freezer to ripen the ice cream, drain off the water and fill the tub with rock salt and ice in proportions of about one to four.

Good ice cream deserves proper care and storage. If you make enough to serve and store, don't expect even the best home freezer to keep the original quality of ice cream stored over 30 days.

In the following recipes, all three basic types of ice cream are represented along with a fresh fruit freeze that is one of the most delectable frozen desserts ever conceived. From these you can develop your own special formulas that will boost your fame as a hostess and homemaker. You will find that making ice cream is one of the womanly arts that will provide fun and family tradition as well as fine food.

Cantaloupe Freeze

2 vine-ripened cantaloupes
 ½ teaspoon salt
 ⅓ to ½ cup sugar (depending on how sweet melons are) Juice of 1 lemon
 Several dashes of Angostura bitters

Scoop out the fruit of the melon and place in blender for about 20 seconds. Add sugar, lemon juice and bitters, blending another 10 to 15 seconds. Pour into freezer can and freeze. Serve in well chilled dishes. Makes eight servings. (Other fruits may be substituted for the cantaloupe.)

Georgia Peach Ice Cream

3 cups milk
 1½ cups sugar
 ¼ teaspoon salt
 1 tablespoon pure vanilla extract or 1-inch piece of vanilla bean
 6 eggs (separated)
 1 quart heavy cream
 3 to 4 pounds ripe peaches or 3 packages frozen peaches

Scald milk, then stir in sugar and salt until dissolved. Pour slowly over well beaten egg yolks, stirring until well blended. Cook in top of double boiler over hot water until thick and smooth, stirring constantly. Allow to cool. Add vanilla. Whip cream and fold into mustard. Pour into 4-quart freezer can and freeze to soft mush. Remove from freezer into large bowl. Add peaches cut into small pieces. If you use frozen peaches, substitute part of juice for milk so you have perhaps 2 cups of milk and 1 cup peach juice and syrup.) After blending peaches into partly frozen mixture, egg whites which have been beaten to peak stage, should be folded in. Return mixture to freezer and finish freezing. Makes about 3 quarts of ice cream.

New portable electric ice crusher automatically reduces tray of cubes or lumps of ice to any size dialed from extremely fine to nugget coarse in a matter of seconds. Ice-O-Matic by Rival Manufacturing Co.

Old Fashioned Vanilla Ice Cream

4 cups fluid milk
1 cup dry milk
4 egg yolks
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 cup granulated sugar
1 cup heavy cream
1/2 tablespoon pure vanilla extract or
2 inches vanilla bean

Heat 2 cups of milk to scalding point. Beat egg yolks till light and frothy, then add salt and sugar gradually, stir until thoroughly blended. Pour scalded milk over egg mixture slowly, mixing well. Pour into top of double boiler and cook over hot water for about 3 minutes, or until mixture coats spoon. While this is cooling, whip dry milk into remaining 4 cups of milk. Whip cream and add with vanilla to cooled custard. Pour into 4-quart freezer can and freeze. The addition of the dry milk makes particularly smooth ice cream.

Apricot Ice Cream

1 cup dried apricots (1 package)
1 cup water

1 1/2 cups sugar
1 quart heavy cream
1 tablespoon vanilla
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup black walnuts

Cover apricots with 2 1/2 cups of water, and simmer until soft, about 15 minutes. Drain. Place apricots and 1 cup of apricot juice in glass container of blender. If necessary, add water to apricot juice to make 1 cup. Cover and blend for 5 seconds. Place apricot puree in mixing bowl, add sugar, and mix until sugar is dissolved. Add remaining ingredients. Mix well. Pour into 2-quart or larger can and freeze.

Banana Ice Cream

1 1/4 quarts of cream
5 bananas
1 1/3 tablespoons lemon juice
3/4 cup sugar
Few grains salt

Mix cream, sugar and salt. Skin bananas, scrape and force through sieve. Add lemon juice. Add to cream mixture and freeze. Makes two quarts.

Grapefruit Ice Cream

2 fresh grapefruits
1 lemon
1 pint heavy cream
1 cup sugar
2 ounces Cointreau

Scoop out juice and pulp of grapefruit. Add juice of lemon, Cointreau and sugar, mixing well. Whip cream and fold in fruit mixture. Freeze to mushy stage then repack in freezer to ripen for about 1 hour with 4 parts ice to 1 of rock salt. This ice cream is at its best the same day it is made. Makes about 1 1/2 quarts.

type and Compton's favors long essays on large subjects. The best way to pick the wanted one is to check all three at your local library. This is also the one place to pre-test the books you want to buy. And it's the best place to get book lists to help guide your child in building his own library.

A set of Childcraft is something else again. This combines several concepts for child development—literature, anthology, creative activities and child guidance, all written by experts. It also features elaborate book lists of its own.

AND WHERE does culture come in? The answer, I think, is that it never comes in, as through a door. Culture from reading, for children, must be a thing without pressure, a thing of invisible osmosis, the wonder feeding on the wonder until it becomes a thing of possession, a thing of private love.

In this sense, it's like any creative thing: First it touches, then it catches, and soon it somehow sets its own pace and grows. This appreciation has nothing to do with physical age.

Betsy was a fidget when it came to family book-reading, until she was almost three and then one day she walked into the living room with The Real Mother Goose under her arm, settled herself snugly on my lap, opened the book to her favorite picture and said, "Read me about this." And that's the way it's been ever since.

Maury, on the other hand, has been an intent book-listener long before he knew what the words were. Even before he was two years old, he would sit patiently and listen quietly for as long as we wanted to read, no matter what it was—whether it was Bambi or a Puffin book or The Rooster Crows or The Happy Lion or Frog Went A Courtin' or April's Kittens or Peter and the Wolf.

At this age, books are a matter of pleasing sounds, specific rhythms and intriguing illustrations.

As he got older, he would carefully examine the pictures over and over again, faithfully bringing back the same book for constant re-reading.

This love affair with a single book happens to children of all ages; and it's seldom easy on the parent. But even then, when the irritation of constant re-reading seems unbearable, often a single look at the child's face—eyes wide open in awe and expectancy, even though they know what's coming, and then the pure pleasure when it does come—this is a look that makes it all worth while.

One of Maury's earliest love-affair books was Marjorie Flack's Angus and the Ducks. It's a simple story, warmly told with a wonderful rhythm of words, about an inquisitive Scottie dog chasing a duck, and it's well illustrated. I read that book so many times, that I still remember whole sections of it. I know this much: If I ever skipped a single word, Maury protested as loudly as if he had been robbed. So long as I live, I will always see Maury at the age of two, sitting at my desk and reading to us from Angus, reciting the book word for word, all the dramatic emphasis in the proper places, turning the pages at the end of the right words, even though he didn't know which words were what. (We have a tape recording of that. A family book reading session is a real moment of memory for any tape library.)

From somewhere, children seem to have picked up a discriminating ability of knowing when to taste books and when to swallow them. And they're more ruthless than so many parents who often feel impelled to read through all the books they buy, as if they were hurdles in a hurdle race.

What children don't like, they discard quickly and seldom ever go back to again. If we ask Maury or Betsy to pick out a book for family reading, they both do it with a sureness and speed. They know. And their taste is individual, varying as widely as it possibly can in any family.

If children know what they like in books, they also know what they don't like. They don't want their books tampered with. They would not appreciate having the horror parts cut out of fairy tales (although their need for security still insists on happy endings). But just as children like to build, they also like to destroy, and they like to see this in books. ("Read that part again about the witch, Daddy.")

One note on comic books: The bad ones are worse than horrible. But there is a small, strong crop of good ones. Among the best are some wholesome science, outdoor and history comics put out by Dell Publishing Company.

The influence of television on child reading? It's there, and strong. But it reaches out in different ways.

In a study of children in grades four to twelve in Ann Arbor, Michigan, it was revealed that one-third of that group believed TV had not influenced their reading habits. About 20 per cent said they now read more books and magazines and less than 15 per cent said they read less than before TV.

(More recently there was a cartoon showing a five-year-old facing a TV set and saying, "I wish they'd invent something new; I've been looking at television all my life.")

Add to that this fact: Annual sales of children's books increased 100 per cent in the past six years—a period in which school population increased only 8 per cent.

The thought here is that perhaps TV isn't replacing reading, but, instead, amplifying it and promoting it. This may or may not be true, but here are a couple of personal case histories, based on our family reading sessions:

Disney had a good TV film about the moon that stirred Maury's interest and so the next night I brought home Exploring the Moon, a large book handsomely illustrated, but with a vocabulary pitched at the teenager. (Another reason for family reading is that a child's speaking vocabulary is much greater than his reading vocabulary.) After our reading of the Moon book, Maury read it himself several times, and I casually questioned him on the contents. His answers showed a remarkable fund of information. This doesn't make Maury a remarkable child (which, of course, he is), but it does show up an important point: Children are not afraid of challenge and TV can serve as a thing that stirs instead of sops.

THERE'S also the case of Betsy and Peter Pan. Betsy first got the record, then saw it on TV. The shellac on the record rightfully should have disappeared long ago. It must now be running on sheer memory. It's been played daily for so long now that Maury has solemnly announced, "I do love Betsy and I do love Peter Pan, but I will break that record."

When we then started reading Peter Pan, Betsy's love intensified. Perhaps now it was partly the love of the familiar. She had seen their faces on TV, heard their voices on record, and now the book had

It's Stainless for LIVING from

Allegheny Ludlum

Nation's leading producer of stainless steel in all forms

What's your pleasure when it comes to fun in the sun: woods, lakes, parks, ranch, seashore, mountains? Week-end jaunts in the car, maybe, and picnics under a tree? Or perhaps just a family dinner right in your own backyard or patio!

Whatever it is, get yourself properly equipped for the kind of outdoors living you like—that's more than half the fun. And buy right the first time when it comes to metal equipment: buy it made of stainless steel. That's how to be sure of lasting service and real economy, because nothing else . . . repeat: NOTHING ELSE . . . is as bright, strong, lastingly beautiful and resistant to rust and wear as stainless steel. It's the champ—good for a lifetime, even in rough, tough outdoors service—able to resist weather, salt air and food or fruit acids, and come up smiling and ever-new with just soap-and-water cleaning.

So, for fishing equipment, outdoor grills, cooking and serving utensils, vacuum bottles, tableware and table service, etc., save yourself money in the long run . . . walk into your favorite store and look for these items—ask for them—made of stainless steel.

And remember about stainless steel, the next car you buy, too. The car that uses stainless steel for brightwork and trim is the car that requires the least work . . . that looks better, lasts longer, and is worth more when you trade!

A FAMILY READING IN THE LIVING ROOM

brought it all alive again in the fullest dimension.

Peter Pan must surely be so much a part of Betsy's heart that she will have the love of it to pass on to her children, just as we have passed on to Maury and Betsy some of our own old and new favorites—Winnie the Pooh, the Babar books, Mary Poppins, Told Under the Magic Umbrella, Aesop's Fables, Stuart Little, Alice in Wonderland, The Rootabaga Stories, the Burgess nature books, and many others.

THERE is the story told in Bequest of Wings about the lady who went into a bookshop to buy gifts for her nieces and nephews. After she had been shown a great many books, she said, "But these are all old books." Whereupon the bookseller smiled and remarked gently, "Yes, Madam, but the children are always new."

And then sometimes the children sell us a story.

I remember the first time I read The Story About Ping to both children, and it was too late to finish it. They were both so taken by the story that I promised that I would read the rest of it the following morning before I went to work, providing they were both washed and dressed before I got up, so that there would be no delay anywhere. There wasn't. The next morning, they were waiting for me, all washed and fully dressed, book in hand.

I don't know how much cultural value they both got out of this book about a yellow duck named Ping who got left behind from a wise-eyed boat which contained all its relatives (father, mother, sisters, brothers, aunts, uncles and 42 cousins; Maury had me count them and they totaled 68 ducks).

I asked Maury why he liked that book so much and he hesitated for a moment, shaking his head. "I don't know," he said seriously. "But when I like a book like this, I don't just like part of it—I like the whole thing."

Betsy, whose interest in this book equals Maury's, was more specific: "I like the part when Ping is the last duck back on the boat and gets spanked."

This makes just as good sense as Maury's reaction to Edward Lear's Complete Nonsense, another favorite at home: "I like the silly sounds of the words," Maury said. Or Betsy's fascination with the rhythm of Millions and Millions. ("There are millions of heads and millions of beds"—with excellent illustrations.) Or with the more delicate rhythms found in A Child's Garden of Verses. Or the children's combined capture by the pictures in 500 Hats of Bartholomew Cubbins or the weird nonsense in any of the other Dr. Seuss books. Or the bond of warm sympathy rooting for The Littlest Reindeer, who is so afraid he will never grow any antlers; or the proud little French boy in that delightful Pancakes-Paris, who gets American GI help in preparing a surprise party for his mother; or the fascinating Zim books on lighting and the sun; or the bear cub in The Biggest Bear, who gets so huge that the boy is faced with the problem of how to get rid of him.

Each book has its private pull and the surprising thing about it all is that it's a pull on the parent, too. Even though we can never face a children's book with the children's simplicity, still there is so much we can catch, not only from the books but from our children.

To talk to a child, to teach a child, to love a child involves crossing so many bridges of unsureness. Always there is the sudden sadness that somewhere a bridge has been broken, that the world of children is often too private a world even for parents to enter.

But when the parent comes down from his peak of authority and shares the pleasure of reading a book with his children, then there are no bridges.

As one youngster put it, "I wonder what families do that don't read books together? It's like not knowing each other's friends . . ."

BLUE-GREEN MONDO "GRASS"

Trade mark Registration applied for U.S. Patent Office.

REQUIRES NO MOWING—MAKES WORLD'S MOST BEAUTIFUL "LAWN"

Our Blue-Green Mondo "Grass" is lily turf, described by the U. S. Department of Agriculture as Ophiopogon Japonicus, (formerly called Mondo Japonicus); native to Northern China, drought tolerance, evergreen, technically a "ground cover." It is a relative of the lily, with paper-thin blades, 1/8" wide. This sod-forming EVERGREEN low-growing oriental genus is currently used by many owners of distinctive homes in America as "lawn grass." Now we can offer Blue-Green Mondo "Grass" at popular prices. IT IS SO HARDY IT CAN BE PLANTED ANYTIME. Will stand traffic, but is slightly heavy to walk on. Blue-Green Mondo "Grass" retains its color the year 'round. Thrives in shade or sun. Extremely hardy, rarely requires watering. Fantastically beautiful, drooping low to the ground in weeping style year after year. REQUIRES NO MOWING AND SHOULD NEVER BE MOWED. Guaranteed to withstand severe degree of freezing or money refunded. Ideal for heavy shaded areas, dry or wet. Free folder of testimonials and photos of Mondo "lawns" sent on request; Mondo is resistant to diseases; insects and animals will not feed on it. Stops erosion, grows compactly, crowding out grass and weeds. Multiplies rapidly, approximately 100 times (10,000%), first year. New sprigs sprout from roots. Enhances property value. For a good coverage first year, plant 4" to 12" apart. Transplant newly sprouted sprigs immediately. Numerous rooted blades to plug. Planting and culture instructions with each order. Remittance with order. Shipped prepaid. Money-back guarantee—if not completely delighted, you may return at once for refund. Shipped now or when desired. Agents wanted everywhere.

Chrome is left rust-free and given a rust-inhibiting wax finish when treated with Collinite Chrome Wax. It does a remarkable job of rust removal; then rubbing the cleansed surface to a gloss gives you chrome that glistens like new. Effective also for removing dulling oxidation from aluminum, and you'll find it a wonder for use on porcelain bathroom fixtures. $1.30, from Clarion Products, Highland Park, Illinois.

Outdoor or indoor use can be made of Midwest Charcoal Grill; easily carried, pre-loaded with charcoal, to the beach, on picnics, motoring or fishing jaunts. Proximity of vertical broilers to firebox adjusts for heat control; atop firebox you can do surface cooking. Strong, chromed-steel grill has carrying handles; 8"x11" meat grids. Size over all 21"x11 1/4". $6.95 ($7.45 west of Denver). From Midwest Metal Co., Kellogg, Iowa.

Grayline revolving spice rack fastens beneath a shelf where spices are instantly accessible and always orderly. Spring-action holders, rubber-coated, tightly grip cans (except jumbo-size) or jars and rack is so devised that it's always in balance and smooth-turning. Key-slot mounting makes rack instantly removable. Diameter 7 1/2". White, red, pink, yellow. $1.00. From Miles Kimball Co., 83 Bond St., Oshkosh, Wisconsin.

Cummins screw-driver attachment for power drills is well worth owning for general household use as well as workshop projects. Even with dense hardwoods, screws are driven in smoothly and effortlessly and the time saved, particularly with large projects, is considerable. Fits 1/4" or larger drills; supplied with slotted bit and Phillips bit that handle up to 3/16" screws. $4.95, from Abraham & Straus, Brooklyn, New York.

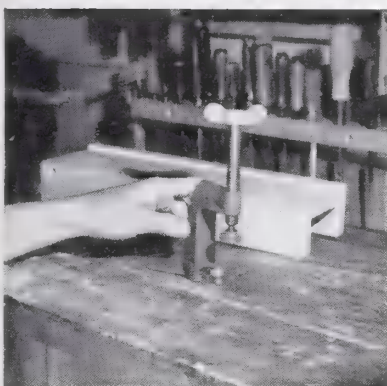

This magnetized sweeper for sewing room or workshop, swoops up pins, needles, nails, tacks or the like as it rolls. Powerful magnetic attraction provided across a six-inch area completes the task in short order; also with this thorough pick-up you're sure stray pins or needles won't cross the path of pets or infants. Gem Pin Mop is hardwood with rubber wheels and hang-up cord. $2.50. General Devices, 746 Third Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

News here is the plastic clothes basket. The very functional innovation of the Quaker Utility Cart is useful for transporting cleaning supplies, gardening materials, barbecue beverages, in addition to laundry functions. Stored, the folding metal cart holds basket vertical. $9.95. White, pink or yellow basket (25" x 18" x 7"). Basket only, $4.95; useful as a dishpan, laundering basin, baby tub. From Carson's, State St., Chicago.

Caston Surface Clamp fastens to workbench top, a unique convenience in clamping devices. You can remove clamp at will from bolt that firmly holds it in place; by spotting extra bolts here and there in workbench top, clamp installation can be instantly located where it best suits a given work project. Also, clamp turns to any wanted work angle. Price $3; extra bolts, 15¢ each. From Caston's, 788 Yale St., Akron, Ohio.

Sliding doors give this attractive bathroom cabinet high functional merit and visual interest besides. Either knob simultaneously controls both doors, sliding them out of your way for free access to shelves. Wolff Lacey Ledge Slyd-A-Dor has strong metal structure. Size 18"x15"x7½". Black, yellow, pink, wine, brown, turquoise, blue, pastel or dark green; hand-painted floral motifs. $9.98. From Stern Bros., New York 36, N. Y.

This three-way tool for paperhanging unites a serrated knife devised for reaching into corners, a double-honed rotary knife for cutting along baseboards and other straightaway areas, and a free wheeling roller for smoothing seams and edges. One Arm Paperhanger, created by a leading maker of professional paperhanging tools, is a time-saving aid to the do-it-yourself handyman. $1.98. From Hyde Mfg. Co., Southbridge, Mass.

Are you aware that
BEAUTY IS BACK
IN VOGUE AGAIN?

For more than ten years home furnishing styles have sprung out of a cold intellectuality. They offered a fine functionalism—BUT prettiness was hard to find.

This fall the home furnishings world abounds with news—all of it pretty, all of it beautiful. Wood is counting again—as wood. Marquetry and inlays are back. Iridescence has arrived out of the blue, making fabrics, glass and accessories seem alive and breathing with the interplay of their changeable colors.

For the first time in years, the fashion news in the decorating world is exciting and different.

Heavy wrought iron is used in Shelf-Mates brackets; strength stems also from bracket design that assures rigid shelving construction free of side-sway even when great weight is imposed. Buy lumber cut to wanted size, screw on Shelf-Mates and it's a cinch to build attractive room dividers, storage shelves, bookcases. \$3 a pair (10" or 12 $\frac{3}{4}$ "); leg bases, 4", pair, \$1.95. Greenwich Wrought Iron, Box 4041, Albany 4, N.Y.

Trewax Sta-Shine cleanses and applies wax in one operation; the cleansed surface when buffed, is left with a lustrous, long-lasting finish. The very efficient formulation, a liquid, contains pure turpentine which is a factor in its cleansing effectiveness. Sta-Shine services wood flooring or paneling, linoleum, cork, vinyl-plastic floor coverings. $1.85 a quart; $6.35 a gallon. Available from Trewax Co., Culver City, California.

Telescoping shelves of Donay Door Caddy fasten by flanged ends to the slotted frames; you install shelf guards in like manner. This simple project supplies a cabinet 42"x31 $\frac{1}{2}$ " with six shelves (expandable from 12" up to 18"). With waste closet-door space thus equipped, you've new storage facilities for bathroom supplies, cosmetics, medicines. All metal; gray enameled. \$5.95, from Donay Co., 2940 S. 38th St., Milwaukee.

Any size stemware can be stored on the Kern Stemware Hanger. The two aluminum, step-shaped bars screw to shelf's underside; you adjust in-between spacing to fit glassware you wish stored. You gain new shelf space and will find also that hanging stemware on this rack helps protect it against breakage and dust deposits. Length 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ "; rubber-coated edge. \$1.95 for 4 pair. From Elron Co., 225 W. Erie St., Chicago, Ill.

Here's an easy way to prevent hair-pin-leg furniture from scratching floor surfaces; equally effective to prevent indentation in rug or linoleum where hairpin curve rests. Just set base of leg into glide's socket; a snap-action clip locks wrought-iron rod to the glide. All metal construction; black or gold finish of baked enamel. $1.35 for set of 4 to fit 3/8", 1/2" or 7/16" rods. From Mastercraft Products, 21 Summer St., Boston 10, Mass.

Something Wonderful Happens WHEN YOU DECORATE WITH EXTENSOLE MODERN

● This is fine contemporary at its newest. Select cherry veneers, enhanced by Extensole's "dry sherry" finish, are accented by the generous use of brass. The drop-leaf extension table has no split in top. (Extensole's patented feature.) Extended it seats up to ten. The buffet-china, while scaled for small dining areas, gives distinction to any interior. Its accordion folding doors provide easy access, and are one of the many unusual features of this group. Matching chairs, solidly constructed, with foam rubber seats, complete this handsome ensemble. Your dealer will gladly show you Extensole modern; surprisingly low-priced for truly fine furniture. (Drop-leaf—$149 for 90" length).

Send for name of dealer and folder showing other extension tables in many styles, finishes,—priced from $69.

The things that money can't buy
come into your home with a Steinway

The Steinway is the standard piano of the world. Today's Steinway, built with the experience and refinements of a century, is the noblest handiwork of the piano-maker's craft. The glowing tone of this great instrument and its gentle authority inspire the child to work and accomplish, and to rise above the softening ease of push-button living. The Steinway stresses, in an age of surplus, the values money can't buy—and the values money can. The best proved piano, it is the longest lasting—its rugged construction stubbornly resists depreciation. The Steinway over the decades is actually the most economical of pianos, and the wisest investment.

Steinway

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

Great artists choose the Steinway. The list includes SOLOMON (at piano) and Anda, Bachauer, Foster, Gorodnitzki, Hambro, American Piano Trio, Mitropoulos, New York Philharmonic Symphony, etc. . . . also nearly all of the nation's leading orchestras, radio and television stations.

Our booklet, "How to Choose Your Piano," will be sent free if you write Steinway & Sons, 45-02 Ditmars Ave., Long Island City 5, N.Y.

Your Steinway dealer is a piano authority. Ask him, "What makes the Steinway superior?" He will demonstrate important differences on one of six Steinway Verticals, like the attractive Louis XV above. (Liberal terms.)

Whatever style you choose, be sure it's CUSHIONED with COTTON

Jane just adores traditional furniture . . . Bob goes for modern. "But," says she, "even my husband is smart enough to know that any furniture we buy must be cushioned with cotton. Cotton-cushioned furniture stays comfortable and beautiful a long, long time."

Cotton cushioning gives your body the firm support so necessary to comfort. The live-action quality of cotton fibers assures gentle resistance to weight and pressure . . . makes sitting more restful. Cotton-cushioned innerspring construction keeps upholstery fabrics smooth and unwrinkled for many years . . . and holds its shape under hardest wear. Cotton cushioning is easily cleaned and never will be damaged by fluids used to clean upholstery fabrics.

For lasting beauty, economy and satisfaction, be sure the next furniture you buy is cushioned with cotton.

ALAN FONTAINE

Our Cover: Leaves of young cabbage, black opals, and the wings of a butterfly shine with nature's own iridescence. Fabrics, modern glass and Favrile glass by Louis Comfort Tiffany hint at this new and exciting way your decorating may go this fall. Story on pages 176-181.

How much does it cost not to own Gorham Sterling?

There are two ways to learn how wonderful Gorham Sterling is. One way is by owning it. The other is by owning something else.

To the woman who decides to own something else—and use the money "saved" for other things—Gorham Sterling will always remain a dream. Like sterling silver itself, that dream will never fade. For sterling is a universal symbol of a woman's taste and breeding. It speaks volumes for her every time she sets her table.

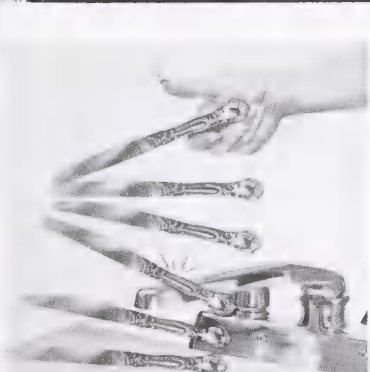

In the character of its shape and design, Gorham Sterling reflects so much of its owner's personality. And the Gorham mark stamped forever on the back of every piece instantly reveals its owner's wisdom and foresight. That's why so many people think of "Gorham" and "Sterling" as meaning one and the same thing: the finest in solid silver.

How much does it cost not to own Gorham Sterling? A lifetime of satisfaction is perhaps not too much to answer. For the longer you have it, the more pleasure you get from it.

Complete Gorham place-settings—knife, fork, spoon, salad fork, soup spoon and spreader—from $29.75.* Settings for 8 in a handsome wood chest start as low as $238.* And most Gorham jewelry or department stores have convenient budget plans which allow you up to a year to pay.

Can You Call a Man a "Failure" at Thirty?

Men who think that success is only a matter of "a few years" are failures . . . however young they are!

How often have you heard some young man in business say, "I'll admit the job I have now isn't much but, after all, I'm only in my twenties."

Or: "Just about every executive in the company I work for is between 45 and 65. I have plenty of time to get ahead."

This mistaken idea that success comes automatically with time is easy to understand. Promotions do come regularly and effortlessly to young men of promise. But the day arrives, often abruptly, when that promise must be fulfilled. Native ability and intelligence can carry a man only to the mid-way point in business—beyond that he must prove his capacity to justify a position of executive responsibility. That calls for a practical, working knowledge of business fundamentals.

The time to build that knowledge—to lay a solid groundwork for your future progress—is now . . . now while time is still on your side. If you fail to recognize that fact, you'll know only struggling, skimping and regret when your earning power should be at its height.

FOR THE BUSINESS MAN WHO REFUSES TO STAGNATE

HALF the world is half asleep! Men who could be making twice their present salaries are coasting along, hoping for promotions but doing nothing to bring themselves forcefully to the attention of management. They're wasting the most fruitful years of their business lives... throwing away thousands of dollars they'll never be able to make up.

If you want to discover how to start to succeed while you're still young—if you want to avoid the heartbreak of failure in later years—send today for "Forging Ahead in Business"... one of the most practical and helpful booklets ever written on the problems of personal advancement. You will discover what the qualifications of an executive are in today's competitive market... what you must know to make $15,000, $20,000 or more a year... what you must do to accumulate this knowledge.

"Forging Ahead in Business" was written for ambitious men who seriously want to get down to bed-rock in their thinking about their business future; there's no charge for the booklet because, frankly, we've never been able to set a price on it that would reflect its true value. Some men have found a fortune in its pages. If you feel that it's meant for you, simply fill out and return this coupon. Your complimentary copy will be mailed to you promptly.

introduces the heirloom look in lighters

The magnificent Nordic Table Lighter is the gift of a lifetime, for the most discriminating person you know. (Yourself, perhaps?) It's a raving beauty in genuine marble, so smoothly sculptured you'll want to fondle it like jade. We've put it on a pedestal (and rightly so) of softly-gleaming metal that looks for all the world like mellowed antique silver. And we've added a graceful new "plume-arm" that makes the RONSON NORDIC light up at the merest flick of your finger. Beautifully moulded of black or rose marble. About 3 inches high. A truly fabulous find at 15.00.

P.S. Naturally, all Ronson Lighters should be fueled by RONSONOL and sparked by RONSON flints!

"If I were an interior decorator, I'd love MODERNFOLD doors for the space they save"

FOLDING inside doorways, they give back all the space stolen by ordinary door-swing. They don't interfere with attractive furniture arrangement—can't slam shut, bump elbows, or pinch fingers. They move quietly at a touch. Their inner framework is all steel; the covering, a wonderful fabric that won't warp or crack. Factory tests that open and close them millions of times prove they just don't wear out. They have trim, graceful contours, many textures and colors. You can wash them easily. They're priced as low as $22.45. Enough reasons? For even more, send the coupon at the right, or stop in at your MODERNFOLD dealer.

The lively arts in the living room

The things you collect with interest—keys, locks, carvings, rocks, anything—can add great interest to your living-room décor

MAYNARD PARKER

Free your mind from the idea that only the so-called "fine" arts are eligible for the living room and you will open yourself to such exciting possibilities as this composition of wood carvings made by decorators William Schneider and Don Garnier from items at Four Corners, Beverly Hills, Calif.

WILLIAM HOWLAND

Keys, locks, escutcheons, various forms of forged iron can be grouped in ways that make many abstract modern paintings look feebly unimaginative in comparison.

The background here is as important as the collection itself. But most important of all is the notion that everything that interests you is eligible for such display.

Like adding a whole new room...

Each ordinary door swings out, stealing valuable space. In a six room house, this adds up to about 90 sq. ft. of floor space and even more wall space. So the space you regain with MODERNFOLD Doors is equivalent to an extra room! In the bathroom above they not only give more space, but an attractive floor-to-ceiling closet opening, too. (And note MODERNFOLD's new sliding-folding bathtub enclosure—the Tub-Master). Really it takes a book to show how much MODERNFOLD can do for your home. Be sure to send for it.

Install one yourself in half an hour

Actually that's all it takes—30 minutes at the most to install an average size MODERNFOLD Door. From the budget-priced "Spacemaster" line, starting at $22.45, MODERNFOLD Doors come in many standard sizes and colors; can be custom-made to fit any opening in any home or building. They can divide rooms, too.

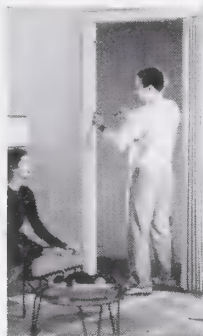

MODERNFOLD is sold through leading lumber dealers, department stores and decorating shops. Or look in the classified directory under "Doors." Or send in the coupon today.

for lasting protection...and beauty above all!

You'll find a Fire-Chex roof incomparable in beauty . . . colorful beauty so remarkable that each Fire-Chex Shadow Blend is copyrighted* as a "Work of Art"! And this beauty lasts because Fire-Chex ceramic color granules are deeply embedded in Carey "Magic Mastic". They will not wash off nor will sun fade their rich colors.

Fire-Chex is fundamentally different than any other kind of roofing. Outlasts all other composition shingles. The Fire-Chex "Magic Mastic" base is a patented re-inforced asbestos-plastic blanket of indestructible Carey asbestos fibers, interlaced and bonded together with Carey thermoplastic asphalt.

This Carey "Magic Mastic" has tremendous strength . . . 24 times the strength of ordinary asphalt shingles . . . yet remains flexible and will not crack. It is highly resistant to the most severe attacks of wind and hail.

Only Carey Fire-Chex, among all composition shingles, has earned the highest possible fire safety rating . . . "Class A", by Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc.

For complete security and satisfaction through the years, a Carey Fire-Chex roof is the most economical roof you can buy.

House by Pease Homes Div., Pease Woodwork Co.

CAREY FIRE-CHEX '400 . . . the new giant individual shingle, designed specifically for today's low, wide-sweeping roofs. With nearly 10 times the color exposure of ordinary shingles, the '400 gives a beautiful effect on any home roof but it is especially colorful on modern low-slope roofs. 50% thicker than ordinary shingles, the '400 provides greater resistance to wind and hail and it is the only roofing shingle with Underwriters' "Class A" fire safety rating on roofs pitched as low as 1" in 12"! Color-styled in 4 exclusive Shadow Blends . . . "Cascade", "Sun Gold", "Cloud Gray" and "Mint Green".

Chester H. Disque, Architect.

CAREY FIRE-CHEX '325 . . . the original Fire-Chex roofing that earned the Fire-Chex record for long life and beauty, maximum resistance to wind and hail and Underwriters' "Class A" fire safety rating. The toughest, strongest, most colorful strip shingle ever developed! 8 exclusive Shadow Blends . . . "Wineberry Red", "Garland Green", "Silver Rain", "Moonmist Buff", "Dusk Gray", "Delta Brown", "Tropic Green" and "Venetian Red". 3 dramatic solid tones . . . "Black Knight", "Walnut Brown" and "Crystal White".

Opening night at the Metropolitan

The opera will be Norma, rich as velvet, smooth as silk, but rarely given.

Now you can have it three ways

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

This year the Metropolitan will begin its season with the performance of an opera which, though infrequently performed, is one of the most frequently quoted and discussed of all works. It is a unique masterpiece, in a special way the grandest of the grand operas. The work is Norma, by Vincenzo Bellini. The current revival will introduce to Metropolitan audiences Maria Callas, the most stellar star of the present operatic firmament.

We deal here, then, with two superlatives. Norma will also be given at one of the Saturday afternoon broadcasts, and with Callas. In addition, an Angel recording of Norma, again with Callas, is available, so you can "attend" the opening of the Met in your living room by using your phonograph.

Since the opening is of importance and since everybody does have a chance to become acquainted with Norma, I welcome the opportunity to discuss it in some detail. Norma is not difficult to enjoy, but it is vastly difficult to perform. In modern times, times far removed from the style of long-breath singing, which flourished when Bellini wrote the work, these difficulties have become increasingly formidable. "The role of Norma," said Lilli Lehmann, the famous Wagnerian singer, "is more taxing than all three Brünnhildes put together."

Toscanini once rehearsed Norma at La Scala for a whole year and then regretfully called off the performance, because he did not feel that he could do justice to the opera with the cast available. In novels about opera and opera singers, Norma often represents the exclusively imported from West Germany by AMERICAN ELITE, INC.

TELEFUNKEN "OPUS HIGH-FIDELITY DE LUXE"

This expression of German electronic genius is the finest high fidelity sound system you can purchase complete in one cabinet. Unfortunately, there are only 801 in this country. With over 15 watts of "clean" amplification, these sets have more than enough power to flood your home with the majesty of pure sound — of unequalled, undistorted presence — on all tuning bands: FM, AM and Short Wave. Open to your hearing now is an entire new world, the brilliant world of Omniphonic sound. It is introduced in the Opus De Luxe by two electrostatic "tweeters," two dynamic mid-range speakers and one extra-large dynamic "woofer" — sealed in a perfectly insulated Speaker Vault. The Selectovox tonal system offers you total control of desired emphasis: orchestra, bass, jazz, solo and intimate. This, too, is an exclusive Telefunken feature. Interior lighting and an anti-fade control are automatic. Built-in Telefunken Record Changer*—and a special compartment for a Telefunken Tape Recorder. The same masters who built the Opus De Luxe have applied their talents to smaller Telefunken systems. Seriously consider them, too.

Telefunken Opus 7 is a complete hi-fi FM table model, delivering Omniphonic sound through 6 speakers. Selectovox tone control system. Jacks for phonograph, outside antennas, tape recorder, extension speaker. Your choice of three superbly crafted cabinets: modern, traditional and blonde. Dimensions: 25½" x 16" x 11".

Telefunken Record Changer in the Opus De Luxe features a ceramic pick-up cartridge with a diamond stylus and a sapphire stylus. One to ten 10" and 12" intermixed records change automatically, swiftly, safely. Needle pressure is amazing — less than ½-ounce! Surface sound is filtered out. Motor is powerful, smooth, silent.

pinnacle of the heroine's achievement; she sings the part on the very night when her lover walks out on her. What, then, is responsible for Norma's exalted reputation and what is the nature of the difficulty which stands in the way of more frequent performances?

To understand this, we must make a slight historical excursion and note that Norma represents the culmination of a development of a style which gave its all to the human voice. Beautiful singing—bel canto—was cultivated in the conservatories of Italy in the last part of the Eighteenth Century. The voice was developed to a point where almost nothing seemed impossible to it, no scale passages too altitudinous, no long note too long, no roulade too intricate. All other ingredients of theatrical entertainment were sacrificed to the singer, who was the undisputed monarch of the lyric stage. He just sang while the orchestra accompanied him, often improvising his own ornaments to the melodic line. Nobody cared about the drama.

BUT BY and by people had enough of it. They got tired of the succession of arias and duets strung together without much reason and they began to resent the tyranny of the singer. They still wanted beautiful singing and they still cared very little about what the orchestra in the pit did. But they did want a semblance of sense, of dramatic cogency, of character and denouement.

Early in the Nineteenth Century there became available to the operatic composer singers who could still sing as beautifully as their predecessors, though they could no longer improvise and "compose" their own tricks and ornamentations, and who in addition were capable of doing some acting. Men like the tenor Rubini, the bass Lablache, the soprano Pasta, the mezzo-soprano Crisi, later Maria Malibran, Manuel Garcia's brilliant daughter, and the famous Jenny Lind, the Swedish Nightingale, were serving the young composers. Of these new composers, three emerged into lasting eminence: Rossini, Donizetti, and Bellini. Of these three, Bellini was the greatest in tragic grandeur and lyric beauty.

Bellini wrote his operas to suit the talents of certain singers. His first great success, La Sonnambula (The Sleepwalker), was written for Pasta and Rubini. His masterpiece, Norma, given at La Scala on December 26th, 1831, was written for Pasta. He knew what he could expect from Pasta's throat. Confidently he set down on paper arias and effects sublime in beauty, uncompromising in the long design of their melodies. And so Norma turned out to be a culmination of a century of art; it is the triumph of bel canto.

In appreciating this unique opera, we ought to quote what a well-known composer said about it: "Those who can hear in Norma only the usual Italian tinkle are not worthy of serious consideration. This music is noble and great, simple and grandiose in style. The very fact that there is style in this music makes it important for our time, a time of experiments and lack of form." We must not, however, use this statement as an indication of "our time" meaning today, for the words were written in 1836, and they were written by Richard Wagner, then a young man of twenty-three.

It was not only Richard Wagner whom Bellini's music impressed. He influenced all lyric composers after him, and the echo of his fine elegiac and moon-drenched music can be heard in Chopin's Nocturnes. Among his other admirers were Verdi, as was to be expected, Berlioz, Bizet, and, unexpectedly, Stravinsky, who believes that it will yet be many years before Bellini's genius will be fully valued.

BELLINI himself was as romantic as his music, a carefully groomed, punctiliously dressed, frail, and prepossessingly sad young man. The poet Heine gave a good description of him: "Bellini was a tall, upshooting, slender figure, which always moved gracefully; coquettish, looking as if he just emerged from a band-box; a regular, but large, delicately rose-tinted face; light, almost golden hair, worn in wavy curls; a high, marble forehead, straight nose, light blue eyes, well-sized mouth and rounded chin. His features had something vague in them, a want of character, something milk-like and in this milk-like face flitted sometimes a painful-pleasing expression of sorrow. It was this shallow sorrow that the young maestro seemed most willing to represent in his whole appearance.

OPENING NIGHT AT THE METROPOLITAN

His hair was dressed so fancifully sad; his clothes fitted so languishingly around his delicate body; he carried his cane so idyl-like, that he reminded me of the young shepherds we find in our pastorals, with their crooks decorated with ribbons. His whole walk was so innocent, so airy, so sentimental. The man looked like a sigh in pumps and silk stockings."

When Bellini visited England to supervise performances of his operas, he was invited by the leading families. He went from one salon to another, and Queen Victoria herself clapped her hands and cried Bis! He would sit down at the piano and play his arias, occasionally accompanying Pasta, who had come with him.

AT ONE of these gatherings, the daughter of the house, Josephine Clarke, then a little girl, saw him, and he made such an impression on her that she remembered him vividly all her life. More than 50 years later she wrote: "I shall never forget this gentle and graceful person, that blond and curly hair—and his eyes, Oh! The eyes of the divine Bellini!"

Women were always falling in love with him and he with them. When he was sixteen, he was writing love letters to the daughter of a lawyer in his native Catania. When he left Catania, he had in his pocket the love token of another girl, an embroidered handkerchief sewn by the hands of a young seamstress. A wealthy woman, whom he met, promptly left her husband to follow Bellini around. It is probable that he was in love, and successfully, with many of the more presentable singers who appeared in his operas, and there is evidence also that he was in love with the famous Maria Malibran, though unsuccessfully. (She helped to make La Sonnambula the rage of London.) It is curious that this charmer was tongue-tied. He spoke his native language badly and was but half at home in French, though much of his career was made in Paris.

In an age when composers shook operas out of their sleeves one after another, Bellini composed carefully. He could and did demand high prices for his works and justified these prices by saying that he composed slowly. Far more than Donizetti and Rossini was he concerned with dramatic verity, and that is the reason Norma, in spite of the old-fashioned quality of its plot, is still possible and even exciting, dramatically speaking, on the stage.

"Locked in my room," he himself said, "I begin to declaim the role of each personage of the drama with all the force and passion at my command. I observe as closely as I can, the inflections of my voice. In this way I can find the melodies and tempi best adapted to them. . . . Then I sketch the whole thing on paper; then I try it on the piano, and if then I feel a corresponding emotion, I consider that I have succeeded."

The famous "Casta Diva" aria in Norma was rewritten by him eight times before he was satisfied with it. He himself regarded Norma as his masterpiece. "If I were out at sea and should be shipwrecked," he said to a Parisian lady, "I would leave all the rest of my operas and try to save Norma."

The action takes place in Gaul during the Roman occupation about 50 B.C., and centers around Norma, high priestess of the Druid temple. In the first scene soldiers and priests await the rising of the moon; at that hour Norma is to perform the symbolic rite of cutting the bough of mistletoe. We learn from a conversation between Pollione, the Roman pro-consul, and his friend, Flavio, that Norma has fallen in love with Pollione and, violating her vows of chastity, borne him two sons. But Pollione has tired of Norma; he is secretly in love with Adalgisa, one of the maidens. The conversation is interrupted by the sound of the approaching Druids. The two Romans conceal themselves. Norma appears and makes an eloquent appeal for peace. She prays to the "casta diva," the chaste goddess. She prays for peace, fearing secretly for the safety of her Roman lover should war break out. Thus the famous aria is in part a public apostrophe of a priestess, in part the private song of woman.

ADALGISA later meets Pollione in the forest and consents to elope with him to Rome.

The second act takes place in Norma's secret dwelling in the forest. In a very dramatic scene, Adalgisa confesses to Norma that she has fallen in love. She names the man. It is Pollione, who has just entered. Norma reveals him

MINK SHOE BUCKLES, clipped to polished leather or suede pumps, will make every other shoe in the room look slightly down at the heels. They're honest-to-goodness mink, in white, natural or silver blue; are sprinkled with a spray of rhinestones and measure 3" long. Terrific eye-catchers for a pair of glamorous gams! $3.98 the pair, incl. tax. Ppd. Howard House, 106 Warren St., New York 7, New York.

WHEN IT RAINS, YOU'LL SHINE in this Sparkle Plenty Rain Hood. To the best of our knowledge, this is the first time anyone has been smart enough to make a party rain bonnet, and it is indeed a drizzle-dazzler. Waterproof black satin, sparkled with rhinestones and pearls, it's just $2.95 ppd. Order it from Bard's, Dept. 1180, Evanston, Ill.

LIGHTER TO DELIGHT HER is set, like a shining crown, in the lid of a white china cigarette jar. Decorated with a Parisian bouquet of flowers and highlighted with gold, the jar holds over a pack of regular or king-size cigarettes, 6" high over all, and the price is just plain unbelievable. $2.95 plus 25c postage. We found it at Helen Gallagher, 413 Fulton St., Peoria, Ill.

THE BIGGEST ASPIRIN that ever cooled a fevered morning brow—or mopped the bar the night before, is made of sponge rubber, a monstrous 4" in diameter. "Condolences" it says on the black-bordered box, and if you act quickly it should take the headache out of lots of your Christmas shopping. $1 postpaid. The Game Room, 1538 Connecticut Ave., Washington 6, D.C.

LITTLE ANGEL BOX is the sweet guardian for the miniature rosary it contains. This is a present for the toe of every good little girl on your Christmas list. The ANGEL BOXES come in assorted pastels, are approximately 2 1/2" high, $1.50 each; 3 for $3.95 postpaid.

NEVER BEFORE A BLANKET LIKE THIS!

Never so much warmth, so little weight! Warmer, ounce for ounce, than natural-fiber blankets!

Never such easy washability! Comes out of the washing machine as soft and fluffy as before!

Never before such shrink-resistance! Folds perfectly, tucks in deeply even after many washings!

the remarkable Acrilan blanket

This is the blanket that changed the buying habits of a nation! As you read this, hundreds of thousands have been sold...and families across the country are learning how completely different this is from any blanket they've known. Look over the facts. See for yourself why your family, too, deserves this new kind of blanket.

What's the secret? Acrilan acrylic fiber. Acrilan is remarkably so. It's astonishingly light. Yet independent laboratory tests prove it's actually warmer, ounce for ounce, than natural-fiber blankets! It's not just washable, but machine-washable. No fear of shrinking...and no danger of matting or boarding! This blanket is non-allergenic, immune to moths and mildew, and comes in a whole bouquet of colors. Why settle for ordinary blankets...when you can own the one, the only, the wonderful Acrilan blanket?

In all sizes for twin or double bed. Also in crib sizes.

The new trend in bathrooms

Make it beautiful! Make it gay! Make it bright and airy! That's the new trend in bathrooms... taking its inspiration from colored bathroom fixtures which were first introduced by Universal-Rundle.

Look at the new ideas in this room. Imagine bright sunshine streaming through the light... and your favorite plants adding a touch of life and color. Notice how the pastel shade of Azure Blue in the U/R fixtures is pleasantly enhanced by the cheerful yellow range drawers and the deep green floor.

Universal-Rundle fixtures are made in six colorator colors and white. You can depend on them for smart, modern designs and meticulously controlled color-matching. And you can depend upon U/R fixtures for easy-clean, long-lasting surfaces. U/R's one-fire "Hi-Fired" processing of vitreous china and multi-coat enameling of cast iron makes surfaces that take hard family use for years.

If you're building or remodeling ask your plumbing contractor, builder or architect for the World's Finest Bathroom Fixtures by Universal-Rundle—with 55 years of leadership!

Master Meadow Bathtub: a luxurious vitreous enameled cast iron bathtub, with extra wide front panel for convenience, free-flowing lines for easier cleaning.

Como Water Closet: the newest in one-piece design. Ultra-quiet performance. Smooth-flowing panel design matches other U/R fixtures.

Cathleen Lavatory: a vitreous china counter lavatory with deep basin, anti-splash rim, and concealed overflow drain.

Universal Rundle

UNIVERSAL-RUNDLE CORPORATION, NEW CASTLE, PENNSYLVANIA • Plants in Camden, N. J.; Milwaukee, Wisc.; New Castle, Pa.; Redlands, Calif.; Hondo, Texas

Once in a long time, a totally new design expression emerges in furniture. Sophisticate by Tomlinson is such an expression. It is not modern in the cliché sense, nor is it a period piece. Sophisticate is utterly casual, yet discreetly elegant. It is thoroughly American — planned for today's kind of luxurious living — without ostentation. It is magnificently crafted in the finest tradition of the cabinetmaker's art. Five rare woods are skillfully matched in parquet and inlay treatments. All are blended beautifully by the mellow Emberglow finish. The specially designed hardware adds a final magnificent touch. Even fabrics are exclusive to the collection. Sophisticate was designed for the discriminating home-maker. And we're sure you'll agree when you visit the large gallery displays installed by the distinguished stores listed below.

CONTEMPORARY DESIGN

New horizons for low-cost luxury... yes, even in your basement with steel

Looks like a million, doesn't it . . . this pleasant playroom? Yet it costs far less than many a playroom not nearly so de luxe!

Why? Because its basic beautifier is low-cost steel, America's great bargain metal. Steel furniture, cabinets and lighting fixtures set the style note for this modern room.

Colorful, easy-to-clean steel wall tile, too—and steel counters and appliances—add a practical touch to the refreshment area. And steel acoustical ceiling panels are both attractive and functional in confining party gaiety to this area.

Because low-cost steel is so durable—is so easy and economical to maintain—it is becoming the choice with more and more homemakers to whom lasting beauty, convenience and comfort come first. Remember: Steel is the foundation of modern living.

Using modern steel as trumps, famed designer Marvin Culbreth has made a grand slam transformation of the uninviting basement below into the luxurious playroom above, aglow with color and hospitably functional throughout.

Floor is Armstrong Textelle® Linoleum—extra thick for unusual comfort and long wear. This fashionable coloring is No. 1555.

TO TAKE THE STRAIN OFF THE LIVING ROOM:

a do-as-you-please room for all the family

This year, 100 housewives were invited to Washington to discuss the features they wanted in their houses. Here's one of the rooms they voted for... a room-in-the-kitchen where the whole family can enjoy its various activities together—and where Mother isn't left out of things, even when she's getting meals. For such a room to be a real success, a floor of Armstrong Linoleum is almost a must. The smooth surface is greaseproof and free of cracks that catch dirt, so it lets you be carefree as you never could be in the living room. There may be chaos here at 5 P.M.—stepped-on crayons, cut-up bits of paper, or the usual trails of cookie crumbs. But with this wonderful floor, it takes only minutes to give the room a fresh, spring-cleaned look—ready for an evening of family relaxation. For modern easy care—attractive wall-to-wall color—Armstrong Linoleum is a smart choice for every room in your home.

SEND FOR FREE BOOK, "Decorating Ideas for Today's Living." Description of this family-room-kitchen, along with a complete list of furnishings, is included. Write Armstrong Cork Company, 5610 Atkins Avenue, Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

FLATTER -WITH - FABRIC IDEAS WITH CELANESE CONTEMPORARY FIBERS

"It's all done with fabrics" was never so true as this fall, and the fabrics that do it so beautifully are of Celanese Contemporary Fibers. You'll see what wonderful things these fibers do in a fabric. Fortisan rayon makes the sheerest sheers. Acetate, well known as the beauty fiber, adds a luxury look. Celaperm Acetate is the fiber that defies color to fade. And you'll see how fabrics woven with these fibers give NEW DIMENSIONS to your decorating ideas, too. For first-hand inspiration, see NEW DIMENSIONS fabrics displayed at fine stores listed on page 294. (All fabrics shown not necessarily at all stores.) ## Florentine Masterpiece CHRISTMAS CARDS

Mailed Direct from Italy!

Featuring Full Color Lithographs from Original Photographs of the Most Famous Religious Paintings In The World

COMPLETE WITH 12 FLORENTINE DECORATED MATCHING ENVELOPES

What a beautiful, meaningful way to send Christmas wishes to your loved ones! Each card is illustrated with a glorious full color lithograph of a world-renowned masterpiece by Botticelli, da Vinci and other famous artists of the XV and XVI century. The lifelike beauty and vibrant colors of the originals were carefully preserved by having master photographers reproduce the pictures right in the famed Uffizi and Pitti Galleries. The lithographic plates were then obtained from these original photos and used exclusively for these Christmas cards.

Cards are book folded and album folded, 4" x 5 1/2", printed on fine quality, parchment-like stock, and bear appropriate holiday greetings. Each work of art is framed by a classic Florentine scroll in rich gold, reds and cobalts. Cards as beautiful as these, if available in U. S. would sell for far more than this low price... made possible by favorable exchange rate.

HEAVY STEEL LOG CRIBS

Let your logs be seen, not hidden. Keep them in these unusual cribs right by the scene of the fire — indoors and out. They'll add a homey charm and receive many admiring glances. Furthermore, your wood will always be handy . . . dry . . . off the floor or ground. A warm gift for your "wood-burning" friends, they're handsome and hardy in lifetime steel with black, rust-resistant finish. Complete with simple assembly instructions.

OUTDOOR LOG CRIB $14.95

5 feet tall, 45" diameter — stacks 1/8 cord

Expressly designed for patio, barbecue, porch — or right outside your door. Makes it possible to store a large supply of wood high and dry . . . outdoors where sun, wind, and rain can age it correctly so it kindles easily, burns heartily.

FIRESIDE LOG CRIB

28" tall, 21" diameter

— holds 15-20 logs

Exactly like the Outdoor Crib but smaller. Can be used anywhere — indoors or out — where a supply of 15 to 20 logs is needed.

COLONIAL OAK PANELING

New idea: the sturdy look of hand-pegged random planking in easy-to-put-up 4 by 8 foot panels, finished and waxed like fine furniture. You can cover a 12'x8' wall in a few hours for only $83.

Unhandy husbands find Colonial V-Plank* trouble to install. The panels fit exactly. Pre-joining ends mess and bother. And the grooves (which give the plank effect) hide nail holes. Your first job is deciding what wood you want—oak, cherry, Korina*, walnut, Samara*, Nakora* or gany. Weldwood V-Plank ends redecorating, and is needed for life. Whether remodeling or building, doesn't paneling like this belong in your home?

See Weldwood paneling at your lumber dealer's or any of our 87 offices in major cities. In Canada: Weldwood Plywood, Ltd.

You'll find versatile drawer space in this double dresser. And the convenient night tables have many uses. Bed comes in double and single sizes also.

Contemporary furniture...to give your home a light, spacious beauty!

AN IMPORTANT PART of Heritage-Henredon quality is unusual attention to detail. In this new collection, gleaming touches of brass add sparkle and distinction. The tall china deck has a muted pattern of herringbone parquetry on the doors.

Each piece is made of genuine walnut, and you have a choice of light beige or a rich sable finish. Lovely, useful furniture like this gives your home quiet beauty you'll enjoy in the years to come.

This 44" x 64" table extends to 118". The buffet (can be used without china deck) has three linen trays behind center doors. Walnut door panels optional.

UNCOVERS HIDDEN TREASURE!

Free Catalog Guides Housewife!

Mrs. J. Pasch, 6125 Kenwood, Chicago, was hiding a fortune right in her living room. It was her expensive furniture—kept out of sight under old-fashioned slip covers. Then a Free Catalog showed her how to keep her furniture clean yet let its beauty be seen always. Now her sofa and chairs are dressed up in fitted super-clear plastic covers.

Made of new satin-smooth "Window Clear" plastic fabric, every bit of the upholstery color and pattern shows through these covers. The durable extra-heavy plastic is non-porous so dust, dirt and liquids can't get through. They give perfect protection and save hours of work. "It's wonderful to see my beautiful furniture all the time and not worry that it will get 'dirty,'" says Mrs. Pasch. "The covers fit perfectly and they're so inexpensive. Every woman who cares about her furniture should see your catalog."

To protect your furniture, write today for FREE CATALOG. Shows over 150 easy-to-order styles, including latest Bumper & Sectional models. FREE Sample of super-clear plastic included. HOUSE OF SCHILLER, 180 N. Wacker, Dept. HB-12, Chicago 6, Ill.

STOW-A-WAY BED DRAWER

Authentic Reproduction of the old Gout Stool

—from the days of powdered wigs and high living. And even today there's nothing quite like it for giving comfort and relief to tired and aching feet, legs and ankles. Its 15" height, 12" width and over-all slant of 22" are all exactly right for resting and relaxing from your knees on down to your toes. You'll revel in its beauty too. Of rich solid mahogany—brown or blond—upholstered in tastefully chosen plain tapestry. Your choice of Green, Red, Brown, Champagne or Citron. For an addition to your own home—or for a gift, it's "happiness insured" even to the price.

(Write for fabric swatches) $14.50 prepaid

Wedding and Anniversary Cup With a Legend of Good Luck

The happy couple who shares a drink from this unusual cup at their wedding or anniversaries, will have luck and love everlasting! So goes the centuries old legend which comes with cup and tells this story: Long ago, an imprisoned silversmith was promised his release if he could design a cup from which two could drink at once, without spilling a drop. He toiled endlessly, created this beautiful design, and so pleased the king he was freed. Charming design and symbolism of the cup and its happy promise, will make it a cherished family heirloom. Silverplated, 5 3/4" high. Only $3.85 ppd. Tax incl.

Imported Tree Ornaments Made of Pure Chocolate!

Delicious PETIT FOURS ROYALE

The World's Most Precious Pastry

IT WOULD TAKE A POET to describe the taste of these incomparable real chocolate covered candy-cakes made from a recipe known to very few! The original petit fours were the delight of Louis XIV of France. This same recipe — never equalled or surpassed — has produced a tempting confection served only in such renowned restaurants as Maxim's of Paris, and the Claridge in London. The ingredients are so pure and stable (not one artificial preservative) that they remain for weeks, yes — weeks in oven-fresh condition, and in your freezer indefinitely! Enjoy these for yourself — or for gifts to reflect your discriminating taste. Box of 40, only $3.00, (6 boxes for $15.00) postpaid. Your money back in 10 days if not delighted. Send cash, check or money order today.
